Race query added to city census

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Election Commission Executive Secretary Alan Licarie has added some new features to this year's citywide census, but he has done it with some personal reservations.

Tuesday, Licarie's office mailed out copies of the 1986 Census to the city's 29,406 households. He will have until June to report the data to the Secretary of State's office who will, this year, be looking for information concerning racial, language and ethnic background. Asking the three new questions will be a sensitive issue, Licarie says.

"The only data we have (on the three new questions) right now is from the 1980 federal census," he says. "I can see the need to update the information, but I am also apprehensive as to how people will accept the questions."

'I want people to know this is not my idea.'

Alan Licarie

Signed into law at the behest of black leaders on Beacon Hill — who wanted to insure fair minority representation in state Senate and Representative districts — the questions will be used to determine concentrations of minorities throughout the state. Licarie says cities like Newton — with only 3 percent of the population described as minority — will not be affected as much as cities like Boston, New Bedford and Springfield.

Because the questions are new, and because some might object

New Year's Eve: amateur hour

Commentary by Howard Altman

Back in 1582, when Pope Gregory XIII invented the calendar we now use, he probably gave little if any thought to what people in the "new world" would be doing Dec. 31.

After all, the island of Manhattan was still owned by the Indians — who were too busy hunting buffalo to worry about getting dates for New Year's Eve. Guy Lombardo's forebearers were growing olives in Sicily and the only noisemakers around were the horns of animals the Indians used when hunting.

Nowadays, though, the Eve is an all-important event and arguably (for so-called grownups anyway) the most eagerly planned for. Conversation in the workplace after Christmas and before the New Year turns to plans for the evening's activities and liquor stores cannot keep their shelves stocked with enough libations to quench the masses' thirst.

To many, the mirth and merriment of the season comes naturally. There is, however, serious peer pressure to have a good time and, too often, to stay home and take it easy is thought to be the work of "godless communists."

Western civilization, though, can take comfort that we are not alone in this feeling. On the first full moon in the Gregorian month of February, the Chinese celebrate their New Year with the same amount of fervor and zest as do their occidental counterparts. While

Aldermen realigned

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — The music has stopped and the game of aldermanic musical chairs is over. When the the Board of Aldermen reconvenes next week, there will be four new committee chairmen.

President-elect Michael Malec last week sent a memo to his colleagues on the board, outlining the new committee and leadership structure. The changes, he says, are his to make according to the city charter. He adds the ad-hoc rules committee — formed to guide the changing of the guard — voted in favor of his recommendations.

Two standing committees — Public Safety & Transportation (PS&T) and Public Facilities — will be chaired by Aldermen Arthur Reilly and George Mansfield, respectively. Louis Irwin and Rodney Barker, will head up the newly-formed Programs & Planning and Special Zoning Committee.

They will join Aldermen Paul Coletti, Elaine Gentile, Sondra Shick and Cynthia Creem as members of Malec's leadership team.

Reilly — a long-time advocate of permit parking, one of the bigger issues faced by last year's PS&T — says he is "pleased that President-elect Malec has confidence" in him.

"Clearly, parking and transportation problems that the city will face over the next few years will be very important," he says. "I am looking forward to

Scandals, storm mark past year

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON — The news — both good and bad — never seemed to end in 1985.

It was a year of history and scandal; a year when even the normally placid season of summer gave way to storms of controversy and disquiet.

But the most significant hallmark of the past 365 days was the beginning of a grassroots drive to end commercial encroachment into residential neighborhoods.

So fearsome was the rising anti-development tide that Mayor Theodore D. Mann discouraged developers from contributing to his re-election campaign and officials from Purity Supreme decided not to build a supermarket in Four Corners.

Meanwhile, developers filed a record number of "perimeter plans" to protect their commercially-zoned parcels.

REZONE, a citizens' group led by Newton Centre activist Thomas Paulini, saw aldermen vote 12-9 against a moratorium on most types of commercial construction, but brought their case to the voters in November.

Every ward in the city voted in favor of the nonbinding ballot issue, handing Paulini & Company an impressive 2-1 margin of victory.

Calling themselves GUARD, "Guard Against Reckless Development Endangering Neighborhoods," the residents greeted a Zoning Board of Appeals decision in favor of Iodice's plan with a lawsuit that has a 50-50 chance of success.

With the court battle pending, the neighbors succeeded in rezoning a 6.5 acre manufacturing parcel known as "The Triangle" for residential use only.

Meanwhile, aldermen created the Zoning Review Committee to revise the city's antiquated zoning laws. The ad hoc group's report and another moratorium drive are on tap for 1986.

The city's legislators also approved the funding for the Village Study, an ambitious planning effort aimed at creating a comprehensive guide for the city's growth by the summer of 1987.

The past year was not a banner one for the city's public safety personnel.

Members of the police union twice rejected city contract offers and firefighters solidly defeated a ratification try. Both groups were considering job actions by the year's end.

Meanwhile, Police Chief William F. Quinn and his troops were rocked by one embarrassment after another, bringing department morale to an all-time low.

A lengthy investigation focusing on two patrolmen who allegedly took part in an off-duty rape on July 17 ended without criminal indictments when the victim refused to testify.

But disciplinary hearings resulted in Thomas M. Cloonan Jr. being suspended for six months without pay for allegedly consuming alcohol while in partial uniform and for failing to properly secure his firearm. Patrolman Robert Keefe Jr. was suspended for one month without pay for

Frank talk about Barney's future

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

WEST NEWTON — Before, he was just Barney Frank, rotund representative to the Congress of the United States of America.

Now, in the year 2 A.D. (After Diet), he is Barney Frank, svelte lawmaker and soon-to-be subject of a People Magazine article on the eating habits of the rich and famous.

Despite that metamorphosis, Frank says he is happy where he is and has no plans to run for the Senate — a decision made easier by the recent departure of Senator Edward Kennedy from the 1988 presidential picture.

"I can have just as much impact from the House as anyone can from the Senate," he says.

Frank was in his Cherry Street office late last week — one of many stops on his tour of the 4th Congressional district which stretches south from Newton to Westport — to share his views on the political climate in Massachussets and the rest of the world.

He talked about, among other things, the ramifications of Kennedy's decision not to run for president, Joseph Kennedy's decision to run for colleague "Tip" O'Neill's seat, the Summit, Soviet Jewry — and the now-famous weight loss.

"I think there would have been a fallout if Kennedy had decided to run for president," Frank says in between puffs of a half-smoked stogie. "There would have been a wide-open Senate seat and a lot of uncertainty because a lot of people would think about running for it. There would have also been a lot more pressure on me to run for Kennedy's seat. I have no plans to run for the Senate. I'm happy where I am because I think the House is more open than the Senate and, depending on the issue, I think I can have more impact here."

'I think the House is more open than the Senate and, depending on the issue, I think I can have more impact here.'

Cong. Barney Frank

Frank also says that there is "no need" for former Bay State Congressman James Shannon to run against Evelyn Murphy for the Lt. Governor's seat vacant now that John Kerry is in the Senate.

"Jim Shannon is a very honest man," Frank says, "and one of the things he was thinking about in the Lt. Governor's race was the need to position himself for a Senate run in 1988. Now that there will be no seat open, I don't think he will need to do that."

Frank breathes a sigh of relief now that Kennedy will remain in Massachusetts. Aside from the fact that he will not be asked to run for the seat, he says there are two reasons why the Democratic National Committee's loss is Massachusetts' gain.

"I think that there is a real problem with office holders having to plot and plan for a 1988 seat in 1985," he says. "This way, there will be less plotting and planning. I realize that campaigning is an essential part of this business, but I think this will allow us to concentrate more on the jobs we have now."

The other positive result Frank sees from Kennedy's decision to stay put is that "Massachusetts will continue to have a great Senator."

"Ted Kennedy is a major force in the Senate," he says. "He will continue to be the leader that he has always been on a lot of major issues like world peace, racial justice and other just causes."

He adds that what makes Kennedy a good Senator may work against him in a national race.

"I think that Ted Kennedy is a good Senator because of the strong principles he addresses on

Storm and stress mark past year

Patrolman Vincent Dennis, an 11-year veteran, was discharged from the force after being charged with sleeping on the job.

When Chief Quinn called Dennis "a longstanding problem," he had little idea of the longstanding problem about to surface in the Greater Boston Police Council, a little-known association of local law enforcement agencies he chaired for the past decade.

After the first reports of an Internal Revenue Service probe into the finances of the GBPC's former administrator Timothy C. Coogan, Quinn commissioned an internal audit of the council's accounts.

The 38-year-old Sudbury resident, whom Quinn considered "like a son," ended up the target of a lawsuit charging him with fraud and conflict of interest for his role in a scheme that diverted more than $1.5 million in public funds into a secret bank account.

By the year's end, a federal grand jury had joined the probe, Coogan's assets had been frozen and the hunt was on to locate the millions missing from the GBPC's accounts.

Scandal also enveloped the Building Department in 1985.

Mayor Mann reacted angrily upon learning that the city's schools had gone uninspected for more than a year. Civil service hiring snafus were blamed, but aldermen failed to convince the mayor that more inspectors were needed.

Instead, Mann responded by commissioning a $20,000 management study of the Building Department. The results of the analysis had yet to materialize by the close of 1985.

It was also discovered that building officials had failed for the past three years to compile the annual zoning report required by City Charter.

Meanwhile, one of the inspectors hired to help the department was indicted on charges of trying to defraud the federal government at his previous job. By the year's end, he had been relieved of his duties in the Building Department.

Other controversies also made headlines.

A group of children at the Williams Elementary School were caught playing "drug games." Psychologist Joyce Brothers theorized the students were imitating television "cops and robbers" when they used monopoly money to pay for flour (cocaine or heroin), oregano (pot) and TicTac candies (pills).

Israeli Knesset member Meir Kahane created a furor when he came to Congregation Beth El for a private fundraising speech to boost the coffers of his Kach party.

Amid a heavy police presence, Kahane strode straight through 200 jeering protestors.

"The Jews in America think the Messiah will come to Newton," he said in an interview.

The owner of Callahan's Restaurant on Needham Street went to jail in the stiffest sentence ever for tax evasion.

Four Garden City mailmen were arrested on drug charges for their involvement in a scheme that allegedly delivered marijuana and cocaine to fellow workers.

Psychiatrists deemed 23-year-old Margaret A. Moreau competent to stand trial on manslaughter charges for leaving her newborn baby to die in a wastebasket at a Needham Street bank. The Upper Falls resident allegedly gave birth to the baby during a break and then returned to her duties as a teller.

In the wake of Hurricane Gloria, state environmental officials ordered the city to stop burning downed tree limbs at the Rumford Avenue landfill after neighbors and aldermen complained of the smoke inhalation.

Adding insult to injury, Boston Edison officials blamed the city's reluctance to properly trim trees for the massive power outages caused by the storm.

City estimates placed the cost of Gloria's brief visit at $6 million, with the damages split evenly between private and public property.

By year's end, officials were hoping that federal disaster aid and a mild winter would help recoup most of the cost.

In another Gloria-related incident, local gardening and landscaping firms turned green when GSX Corp., which manages the Rumford Avenue transfer-haul station, unilaterally doubled the tipping fee for the disposal of brush and leaves.

The city won a temporary rollback of the price hike in court, but the legal battle's next round was delayed until early 1986.

Serious lead hazards were discovered at the Bowen and Angier elementary schools, but neither situation had been corrected by the close of 1985.

After several community meetings marred by poor attendance, a frustrated Maureen Turner, chairman of Newton's Task Force on Drug and Alcohol Abuse, accused residents of "sticking their heads in the sand" on the issue.

An audit of the city's accounting controls uncovered the potential for major financial problems in the parking meter collection system.

After ending a contract wrangle with the teachers in February, the Garden City's bilingual education program raised the ire of state school officials.

Opponents to the closing of the Hyde Elementary School were angered when the School Committee received $85,000 to expand classroom space at the Memorial-Spaulding Elementary School. School officials ended the year by submitting a request for $273,273 to pay for major expansion work at the Countryside Elementary School.

The School Committee also targeted Bigelow Junior High for closing, eliminated 13.5 teaching positions and 1.8 guidance jobs, reversed its decision not to pay for private school busing and passed a budget that came in $32,000 over the limit set by Superintendent John Strand.

The committee also forestalled a repeat of the teachers' "work to rule" saga by quickly signing a new three-year contract with the union in December. Thanks to state funds, the educators receive two consecutive annual raises of 7 percent and a third hike of 6 percent.

Overall, total school enrollment declined for the 18th consecutive year, while the city's elementary school enrollment climbed slightly for the first time in a quarter century.

The Board of Aldermen became the focus of two separate lawsuits when it turned down development requests from the Life Studies Foundation and Congregation Shaarei Tefillah.

Vehicle maintenance in the Public Works Department came under fire when a runaway steamroller severely injured a worker.

Numerous residents roundly criticized DPW Commissioner James Hickey's decision to reinstitute the controversial "stone-sealing" road repair program abandoned 10 years ago.

There were two untimely deaths of note during the past year.

Ward 8 Alderman Robert Shuman died at 47 in February when complications arose after he underwent open heart, bypass surgery.

William Shaevel succeeded his close friend after a special election in June and led the way when the Oak Hill Community Center was dedicated in Shuman's name.

Richard Farnese, a 24-year-old Auburndale resident, died from stab wounds after languishing in a coma for more than a week. Initial testimony in the case indicates that Farnese did not put up a struggle when his assailant attacked him in a Watertown apartment.

On the political scene, Mayor Mann turned 63 and easily won the first uncontested mayoral campaign of his career.

The city's legislators said goodbye to Aldermen Ed Richmond and James Regan and hello to Josh Davidson and Susan Basham.

Shea's loss created a leadership void, but Alderman Michael Malec had filled the gap by December.

The School Committee said goodbye to Kathy Jones, Nancy Mann and James Mnookin and hello to Sally Rizzo, Jennifer Huntington, Gerald Bazer and Sandra Schnipper.

State Sen. Jack Backman announced his decision to retire after 22 years of public service, prompting a scramble to succeed him.

The city's building boom also continued.

The residential tax rate climbed 20 cents and the commercial tax jumped 42 cents.

The Valles Steak House building was razed to make way for an office/retail complex with an 800-car underground parking garage.

After announcing plans to build an 8,500-seat sports center, Boston College officials released data showing the school brings $67 million in revenue a year to the city.

The City of Boston approved the school's arena plan after BC officials agreed to a $322,000 linkage payment.

By year's end, however, no decision had been reached on the 700-car parking garage needed to keep a capacity basketball crowd from parking on neighborhood streets.

But not all the news of 1985 was bad.

Aldermanic attendance at roll call votes improved and the full board made international waves when it passed a resolution calling for an end to the nuclear arms race.

Aldermen also broke new ground by approving the city's first "Pooper-scooper" law.

The Hyde School was sold for at least $800,000 for use as handicapped and empty-nester housing and the Oak Hill School was leased for $75,000 a year as a private school.

The former Auburndale Yard was sold for $750,000 for use as single family homes and elderly housing and aldermen approved the sale of the former Claflin School for at least $300,000 for use as artist housing.

The city's Arts in the Parks program celebrated its 10-year anniversary, Temple Emanuel its 50th and the St. Mary of Carmen Society enjoyed a massive 50-year anniversary fiesta highlighted by a 25-minute fireworks show at Albemarle Field.

Residents Gerald Sudalter and Daniel Roma were cited for apprehending a 16-year-old accused of pointing a pistol at the head of a woman in Newton Centre in April.

Two teachers from the Perkins School for the Blind were also honored for helping to calm down a deaf mute who held police at bay for hours on March 13 by firing a .357 magnum handgun into the air in front of Mt. Alvernia High School.

Hobart Road resident Dr. Bernard Lown won the Nobel Peace Prize for his work in founding the International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War.

Newton-Wellesley Hospital delivered its first "test tube baby."

Ground was finally broken for the development of elderly and low-income family housing at the former St. Jeans Parochial School.

On the 10-year anniversary at the end of the conflict in Southeast Asia, a group of local veterans staged a successful grassroots drive to erect the city's first Vietnam Veterans Memorial on Washington Street.

In a historic exchange visit, six Chinese students came to Garden City schools for classes.

Inaugural ball set for Jan. 11

Invitations are going out to residents throughout the community for the Inaugural Ball and reception taking place Saturday night, Jan. 11, (8 p.m.) at the Newton Marriott Hotel. The event honors Mayor Theodore D. Mann and Newton's other elected officials, members of the Board of Alderman and the School Committee.

The event is open to the public and those who have not yet received invitations and wish to attend are urged to call 552-7100. All employees of the City of Newton have already received Mayor Mann's personal invitation to attend.

Local, State, and Federal officials are among the invited dignitaries. A grand march of Newton's officials, dancing, and refreshments feature the event.

The committee on arrangements for the Inaugural Ball, which is privately sponsored, is headed by Edward Mandell of Newton Centre.

Woman's condition critical after collision

BRIGHTON — A 73-year-old Watertown woman who was injured in an automobile accident last week remains in critical condition this morning in the intensive care unit of the St. Elizabeth's Hospital.

Elizabeth H. Bolton was taken to the Cambridge Street hospital Friday after her car collided with an MBTA bus near the intersection of Washington Street and Kempton Place in West Newton. According to police, Bolton swerved into the path of the westbound bus shortly before 2 p.m.

The bus driver and five or six passengers, however, escaped injury, police said.

Bolton, who was driving a 1979 Oldsmobile sedan, was unconscious at the scene but started responding to ambulance technicians on her way to the hospital, police said.

She was listed in serious condition on Friday afternoon, but slipped into critical over the weekend.

Police believe Bolton may have lost control of her car because of medical difficulties since several witnesses claimed her car looked like it was without a driver before the impact.

Police said the bus is being inspected by the Department of Public Utilities since only the rear right brake was activated when the bus driver, Russell S. Rowling of Dorchester, tried stopping the vehicle, police said.

Man nabs two diamond rings from store

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — A suspect who claimed to be looking for a gift for his girlfriend grabbed two diamond rings off the counter of Hendricken Brothers Jewelers late last week, ran out the front door and sped off in a car parked on Columbus Street.

The clerk who was showing rings to the suspect chased him out the door and managed to get the license plate number of his vehicle — a red Toyota — before it raced out of Newton Highland Square, police said.

The jewelry clerk described the suspect as being a white male in his early 30s with strawberry blond hair, short finger nails and wearing a blue denim jacket, according to police.

The rings taken from the Lincoln Street jewelry store were described by police as being a 1.9-carat diamond ring worth $7,000 and a $4,000, 1.28-carat ring made of white gold with a pear-shape diamond.

Officer Jack Kearney discovered the Toyota, which belongs to a Needham resident, on Raeburn Terrace with its engine still running shortly after the rings were stolen. The steering column and ignition were damaged, which indicates the vehicle might have been stolen by the suspect, police said.

After interviewing several residents of Raeburn Terrace, police learned a second vehicle was in the area shortly before the getaway car was discovered. Apparently, two white males got into the car — a white Oldsmobile or Pontiac — which was driven by a third suspect who was described as a white male with dark hair, glasses and a red jacket.

New school security systems limit crime

NEWTON — The School Committee is serious about taking "a bite out of crime," and is appropriating funds to design a security system for every school building.

The estimated cost of designing and installing an alarm system, which someday might eliminate the malicious destruction of school property, is somewhere in the neighborhood of $193,000, according to the Director of Support Services Roy G. Cornelius.

The committee has approved money from its Charter Maintenance Fund for the design of an alarm system in the city's 19 educational facilities at a cost $32,000. The funds do not include installation, which Cornelius expects could cost the city approximately $161,000.

"The exact nature of the alarm system and how it reports breakins, as well as a more detailed estimate of the costs will be determined as part of the design system," Cornelius said.

The director of support services asked the committee to fund the plans from its maintenance fund — which is 2 percent of its annual budget, per order of the City Charter — in order to hasten the process "by about two months."

"Accomplishing this project will be a lengthy process," Cornelius explained. "Overall, it could take anywhere from about 12 to 18 months for the project. I expect, however, it will take the lesser time rather than the longer time."

As part of his request, Cornelius urged the committee to ask the potential system designer to provide a detailed cost estimate for installation when the plans are 30 percent complete. "This can then be used by the School Committee to make the requests for funding from the Board of Aldermen for the actual installation work," he said.

School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile said the committee normally appropriates funds from its maintenance funds for small projects such as painting classrooms or repairing lockers. By taking the money from its own budget, however, "we're hoping to show the mayor and the Board of Aldermen that the School Committee is committed to the idea of improving security at the schools," he said.

Gentile said the committee first decided to explore the question of improving security at the end of the last school year when several incidents of malicious destruction occurred at Newton North after the building had closed. Additionally, several schools on the South Shore at the time were faced with an inordinate amount of school property destruction, he added.

"I guess we've been pretty lucky as far as damage at the schools," Gentile said. "But we decided to go forward with the alarm system as a precautionary measure."

Gentile said the Police Department — particularly Chief William F. Quinn — has been working with the committee in trying identify ways to protect school property. "After all, this is a city-wide issue and not just an issue for the people who work or have children in the school system," he added.

According to Cornelius, "there are several items yet to be resolved before we can go ahead full force, but those should be resolved in the next few days."

Neighbors up in arms

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The spokesman for a group of some 50 Walnut Street residents says they will "do anything legally possible" to block Alternative Home Inc.'s (AHI) plans for a half-way house in their neighborhood.

"The most important reason that we are opposed to the idea of a group home for emotionally-disturbed people is because it represents a potential danger to ourselves and our children," Alan Cath of 508 Walnut St. says.

Cath is leading residents worried about the safety of their neighborhood. He says they are raising money for legal proceedings should the Board of Aldermen approve AHI's petition for a special permit to convert 515 Walnut St. into a group home for 10 emotionally disturbed adults.

"We are going to do everything," Cath says, "including possibly going to court, to block this. I don't want to go into details of the strategy, but every avenue will be utilized. Opposition to the home is virulent and we want to see it reverted back to single-family use."

Cath adds neighbors do not want a repeat of problems they had with Lutheran Services' group home that formally occupied the building.

"The evidence we are using to oppose Alternative Home has to do with the prior use of the building," Cath says. "It was a group home for juvenile children. Many of us experienced perpetual problems; break-ins, theft, vandalism, disturbance of the peace and the pulling of fire alarm boxes on the front porch which would bring out Newton's finest in full force. We recognize that it is not the same organization or commodity. However, the situation is sufficiently similar that we can't help but object to it."

In addition to the bad memories with the juveniles, Cath says the neighbors object to what they see as an uncontrollable situation.

"We are worried about the unpredictability," Cath says, "if nothing can be done that can assure us that the situation won't exist. (AHI staffers) talk about a screening process, but that is subject to judgment calls all the way down the line. I don't want my children's safety or lives to depend on someone else's judgment, especially at point blank range."

Local group targets Coors products

NEWTON — For every can or bottle of Coors beer purchased at restaurants, bars and liquor stores, money is channeled to right-wing terror organizations like the Contras in Nicaragua, the South African Military Police and the Ku Klux Klan in the United States, according to Elisa Grad, a spokesman for Pledge of Resistance, a 200-member Newton-based peace group.

Quoting a Washington Post article dated May 3, 1985, Grad says Coors' U.S. Council for World Freedom provides money and training for the Contras. In addition, she says he contributes heavily to the Moral Majority and founded the Heritage Foundation — a right-wing think tank whose publication, "Policy Review" is co-edited by Roger Pearson. Pearson, she says, formally co-edited a magazine called "Western Destiny" with former Waffen SS officer Arthur Erhardt.

Because of those connections, the Pledge is organizing a boycott of Coors' products in the Garden City. The local boycott, Grad says, will align itself with a similar boycott started on the west cost in 1977.

"Joseph Coors has a long history of supporting facist, racist and anti-semitic causes," Grad says. "We want to educate the public about where their money goes to and hopefully make them realize that there is such a thing as corporate consciousness."

Last week, Grad's group mailed letters to Garden City liquor store and restaurant owners, informing them of what they are doing and why. She says it is important that they know what they are dealing with. She also wanted to give them the opportunity to respond to her criticism before the first campaigners appear with their leaflets in front of any restaurant or liquor store this weekend.

"I don't think it would be fair to have people out in front of a store or restaurant handing out leaflets without letting the owners know about it beforehand," she says. "Who knows, maybe they will voluntarily clean the shelves of Coors before we get there."

The boycott's goal, Grad says, is twofold. She says she wants to reduce Coors's sales and increase public awareness of Joseph Coors' political activities.

"We want to convince consumers not to buy Coors products," she says. "We want to get to the point where one friend will say to another, 'how can you buy that when you know where the money is going to?'"

While the Pledge deals strictly with Central American issues and will sponsor the boycott around the issue of Coors donating money to Contra rebels fighting against the Nicaraguan government, Grad says the brewers other interests will in turn interest other groups.

ASSESSING WORTH
Jewelry appraisals may be done for insurance purposes or for an estate settlement. An appraisal for insurance purposes should be performed at the time of sale. This should take current market prices into consideration as well as costs for labor, materials and creative design. An appraisal for estate purposes will differ. It is an assessment of the price of an item paid by a willing buyer to a seller. It would not be a forced sale and time would not be of the essence. This type of appraisal does not involve replacement or recreation of the article. As a result, assessed value is usually lower than the replacement value.
When you take the time to invest in quality jewelry, take the time to get an appraisal. When you shop at CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" you'll get a full range of jewelry services. State scorecard improved in 1985

Despite a tarnished spot or two or three in the fabric, the year just winding down has to be counted an excellent one for Massachusetts in government and in the economy. Legislators have been responsive to the public pressure on several counts. In business, excepting those high tech layoffs, we've been all aglow with prosperity.

The largest tax reduction in history has to be the foremost accomplishment on Beacon Hill even though it has to be counted a triumph for Barbara Anderson's CLT petition drive. The two branches of the General Court had to resolve severe differences to come up with an acceptable package. Senate leadership wanted to retain all that surplus revenue building up to keep the old tax-and-spend wagon rolling.

In the process, rules reform took a stride forward under the new House boss, George Keverian, by sharing power with his fellow members and giving the signal for an overwhelming endorsement of the surtax repeal.

A big gainer is Michael Dukakis. The governor astutely shifted position to favor surtax repeal, perhaps assuring himself of another term. While much that he proposed was altered along the way, he saw his education support program enacted. A seat belt law, workmen's compensation revision, Boston's bailout financing package (part of which, the new hotel/motel tax, will bring an extra $80,000 to the City of Newton), funding of the "right to know" bill on hazardous waste amd initiatives in crime prevention all indicated effectiveness of a rare working relationship between the branches.

A simple truth about what goes on up there under the Golden Dome is that work done could have been accomplished in half the time. Even with a praiseworthy record, the branches left hundreds of bills in committee and, as always, pushed much that was crucial over to next annual session. Here is an area where the Great and General Court should prove itself worthy of its title by engaging in self reform. Instead of waiting for petitions to apply the heat, lawmakers might well embrace bills calling for session limitation. Nonproductive time under the current process is disgraceful.

On substantive matters, state and local, dealing with the homeless and affordable housing and coping with a rental crisis, have to get priority. We applaud a shift away from deinstitutionalization with significant appropriations to consolidated institutions. That in itself could greatly relieve the homeless situation.

Even with a report card that has a few A's, our elected officials have no reason to be complacent.

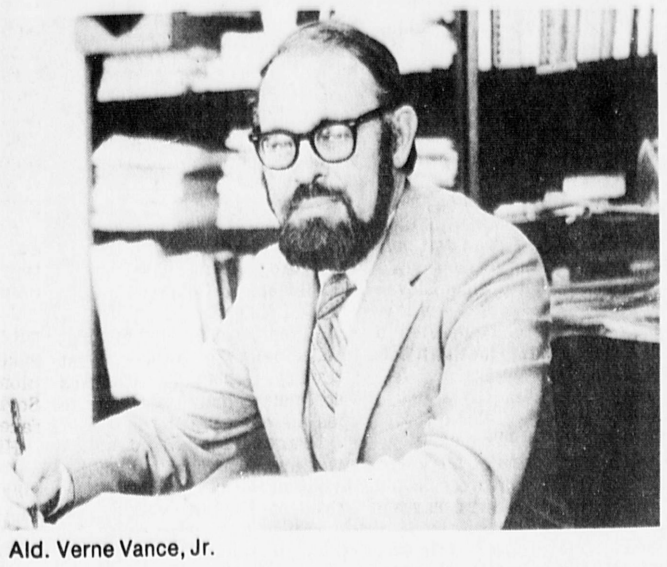
Referenda no longer practical

Simple answers to complex questions

By Verne Vance



Ald. Verne Vance, Jr.

Newton, together with other muncipalities and the commonwealth itself, is awash in referendum and initiative petitions, those throwbacks to the age of "pure" democracy in ancient Athens and in open town meetings in Massachusetts.

It is said by the proponents of the referendum/initiative process that the process brings governmental decision-making back to the people, in the manner of those older vehicles of democratic govenment. There is one problem with that theory: In the case of most referenda/initiative petitions it is just plain wrong.

It is wrong because most public policy issues are too complex to be resolved by a simple "yes" or "no" answer by a voting public, most of whom have had little or no exposure to meaningful education on the issue. At least in ancient Athens and in open town meetings in Massachusetts, all who voted had heard a full public debate imediately preceding their vote on the issue and had the opportunity to propose amendments to deal with problems raised in the course of such debates.

Those circumstances cannot be replicated in a governmental unit encompassing many thousands of voters. That is why at every level of government in America, except for some of the smallest towns, our forebears had the wisdom to entrust public policy-making to popularly-elected officials who are in a position to obtain the knowledge, and to engage in the kind of debate, that is necessary to provide resolution of complex issues.

Our system of representative government properly prefers public policymaking by informed and thoughtful deliberation rather than voter campaigns consisting largely of bumper stickers saying "VOTE 'YES' ON QUESTION 3."

The difficulty with government by referendum/initiative is well illustrated by the present dispute over the meaning of the vote on the 1983 ballot question, which asked whether the voters would authorize the city to override Proposition 2 ½ tax limits for bonding costs for a new main library. The voters, in a low turnout election, said "no" by a vote of about 60 percent to 40 percent. Now with the city administration and the Board of Aldermen moving ahead with plans to construct a new main library without overiding Proposition 2 ½, opponents of that plan are arguing that the 1983 vote meant that most voters in the city do not want a new main library, whether or not financed by overriding Proposition 2 ½.

It is certainly possible that some of those who voted "no" meant to say that — no new library, period. It is also possilble that some of the "no" voters were not necessarily opposed to construction of a new main library but did not want to finance it by overidding Proposition 2 ½. It is also possible that "no" voters voted "no" because there was no specific library proposal before them but that if there had been they might have been willing to vote to overide Proposition 2 ½.

As Bob Turner of the Boston Globe put it, "The fallacy is that referendums assume the people have a vocabulary of exactly two words: yes and no." As the 1983 vote graphically demonstrates, that vocabulary is simply too limited to give meaningful answers to complex public-policy questions.

This is not to say, of course, that public input into the policymaking process or representative govenment is not important. It is important, indeed necessary, to an informed and responsive legislative process because it tells the people's representatives what the people think on public-policy issues — and it can do so, not in the simple yes or no terms, but in more complex terms that provide a meaningful basis for public policymaking on complex issues.

This is also not to say that it never appropriate to use the referendum/initiative vehicle which the city charter gives its citizens under certain circumstances. It is only to say that that vehicle should be used very sparingly and only for issues that are basically yes/no issues.

In my judgement, the proposed removal of the four consecutive term limit for school committee members was such an issue; so I can comfortably accept the decision of the voters on that one.

However, I do not believe that the proposed building moratorium was such a yes/no issue. While I regard the non-binding vote on that issue as a useful piece of public input, I do not accept it, by itself, as an adequate basis for determining public policy on an important and complex matter.

Used sparingly, and with a full understanding of its limitations as a vehicle for public policymaking, the referendum/initiative petition can be a useful tool that should be retained in our city charter. However, it can never be an adequate substitute for a popularly-elected body of legislators who can thoroughly explore all aspects of a policy proposal, including the views of knowledgeable members of the public, and then tailor their decision accordingly. That is the cornerstone of our system of representative government and we should not permit it to be swamped by a tide of referendum/initiative petitions that seek to ignore the complexities of public policymaking in the name of popular sovereignty.

Attempting to shed 'Taxachusetts' label

By George B. Merry

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who was criticized in the 1982 campaign for his role in putting the surcharge on the books as part of a record tax-boost package in late 1975, had little choice but to support the repeal.

Massachusetts has had its share of nicknames over the years. But none is less cherished than that of "Taxachusetts."

It's a label that makes many a Bay Stater, especially Beacon Hill lawmakers, "see red," and something they would like to lay to rest.

The recently approved, two-step phase-out of the decade-old 7.5 percent surcharge on personal income taxes is an attempt in that direction. While its benefits may be less substantial than some taxpayers have been led to expect, from a political standpoint anything that lessens government's bite on people's wallets helps.

The commonwealth can certainly afford the $331 million in annual revenue it will lose when the surcharge repealer becomes fully effective in 1987. And clearly this tax-on-a-tax was the easiest and most visible way for lawmakers to please constituents.

Still needed is a complete overhaul of state and municipal tax structure, coupled with a sorting out of state and local responsibilities.

This is something a special legislative commission is working on, as have similar panels in the past. Hopefully by this time next year the long-overdue fiscal blueprint will be complete. Obviously, any meaningful revision of the tax structure will shift the tax burden.

Whether commision recommendations embrace replacing the state's present flat-rate personal income tax with graduated rates will likely hinge on an expected court challenge of a new system of personal exemptions that is provided, along with the surcharge repeal, in the new statute.

Allowing those who earn the least the biggest exemptions and those in the highest income brackets the smallest ones, is a type of graduated tax structure, or so it would appear. And imposition of a "grad tax" is barred by the Massachusetts constitution.

Critics of the "vanishing exemption" system, like Barbara Anderson, the executive director of Citizens for Limited Taxation (CLT), view it as a backdoor approach to the "grad tax." They note that attempts to amend the constitution to permit graduated tax rates keyed to personal income levels was rejected by voters across the commonwealth four times in the past quarter century.

Boosters of the "vanishing exemption" say it is not another form of graduated tax. On their side is a 4-to-3 advisory opinion in 1982 from the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, which upheld the concept. That ruling, however, made it clear that if the intent of the exemption structure was to provide what amounts to a graduated tax, then it would be unconstitutional.

There can be little doubt that the purpose of the "vanishing exemption" — indeed its appeal to rank-and-file lawmakers, particularly those from low-income areas — is to give a bigger break to those who have less.

Single people with incomes of less than $6,000 and couples with incomes no more than $10,000 will be tax exempt. Previously, single people making less than $5,000 and couples making less than $8,300 had been exempt.

Under the setup, low-income taxpayers would qualify for an exemption up to $3,800, and for couples up to $8,000. These would drop to a low of $600 for single taxpayers earning $40,000 a year or more, and $1,200 for couples with joint incomes of $80,000 or more for the year.

Currently, single taxpayers, regardless of what they earn, are allowed a $2,200 personal exemption and couples, $3,200.

Since those who have the most income stand to benefit most, and those who earn the least stand to gain the least, from repeal of the surcharge, the "vanishing exemption" device was added to help even things out a bit.

But as well motivated as any such arrangement may be, it is at best awkward and may violate the state constitution.

A less-clouded and certainly more straightforward approach would be through a system of graduated tax rates, similar to the federal government and most of the other 43 states that tax personal incomes.

Although state legislators might prefer a "grad tax," as many have in the past, the necessary change in the constitution could not be made until 1988. Such a move would require approval by a majority of senators and representatives in 1986, and similar support in 1987 or '88, to reach the ballot where voters would have the final say.

Such proposals in 1962, '68, '72, and '76 were soundly rejected.

It is uncertain to what extent public sentiment about the "grad tax" may have changed over the nine years since the most recent try was thwarted, by better than 2 to 1.

While Bay State lawmakers are patting themselves on the back for having repealed the surcharge, at least some of the credit belongs to others. The more than 137,000 voters who signed the CLT initiative petition to end the tax-on-a-tax surely provided a push.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who was criticized in the 1982 campaign for his role in putting the surcharge on the books as part of a record tax-boost package in late 1975, had little choice but to support the repeal. It is something that would have happened with or without his signature. The statute also seems to remove a potentially nagging issue from the coming governor's race, in which he will be standing for reelection.

Had the legislature not enacted the tax cut, voters would do it next November. The surcharge-repeal portion of the CLT initiative now becomes redundant. The rest of the measure, however, is anything but moot. It involves a proposed cap on annual state revenues, tied to statewide personal income levels.

If lawmakers fail to enact that measure, and there is no hint they will, the CLT aims to press its initiative onto the November ballot.

1985 revisited: Some ask, 'Is God punishing us?'

By Robert Barr

1985 was a disastrous year. Floods, earthquakes and hurricanes killed more than 40,000 people around the world. Airplane crashes took nearly 2,000 lives, and hundreds died in South Africa's strife.

One satisfying strike against terrorism was followed by 60 deaths in a hijacking rescue attempt. Rock Hudson died as the toll from AIDS passed 7,500.

It was the kind of year when TV news could ask, as it did in New York, "Is God punishing us?"

Yet a Gallup Poll late in the year found that four out of five Americans were contented with their lives, although only half were satisfied with the drift of the world in general.

Disasters missed most people, and the economy purred along with low inflation despite record trade and federal budget deficits. If you were a fan of the Chicago Bears or the Kansas City Royals, it was a satisfying year indeed; if you were the "Refrigerator," the world was your oyster.

1985 also brought a vigorous new leader in the Kremlin; new hope for peace after a round of summitry and summit tea; a defecting defector and a big crop of spies; a guilty guru; a $2 trillion national debt and a resolve in Congress to balance the budget, if not right away.

President Reagan defended "Star Wars" against critics at home and abroad, while Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger — embarrassed by $7,000 coffee makers and $640 toilet seats — finally found a weapon he couldn't afford: Sgt. York, the gun that couldn't shoot straight.

It was a year to remember: the 40th anniversaries of V-E and V-J days, and 10 years since the fall of Saigon.

Again and again, disaster dominated the news with staggering numbers:

— 25,000 people were smothered in mud which spilled down an erupting volcano in Colombia on Nov. 13.

— 11,069 deaths in a hurricane in Bangladesh in May, which left a quarter of a million people without homes.

— 7,000 or more deaths in the Mexico City earthquake Sept. 19.

— Air accidents killed 1,946 people by Dec. 12, including 520 people aboard one 747 which slammed into a Japanese mountain and 329 on another 747 which went down in the Atlantic. A chartered Arrow Air DC-8 crashed Dec. 12 on takeoff from Gander, Newfoundland, killing 248 members of the 101st Airborne Division and the crew of eight. Samantha Smith, the Maine girl who captured the world's attention with a letter to the Kremlin, died in a commuter plane crash.

There were 400 dead in Chinese floods, 268 dead when a dam burst in Italy, 186 dead and hundreds more still missing in a mudslide in Puerto Rico. Eleven people died and a whole neighborhood was incinerated in Philadelphia in a showdown between police and cultists.

Famine eased in Africa, but 18 million people were still at risk of starvation by year's end. In India, grain crops overflowed storage bins while hungry people in some regions gnawed on roots and bark.

With black rage grinding against white intransigence, South Africa suffered through a violent year in which more than 9,000 people were arrested. The death toll in 16 months of rioting climbed past 900.

The Reagan administration's hopes that President P.W. Botha would take significant steps to dismantle apartheid were dashed in August when Botha dismissed a one-man, one-vote system as "suicide."

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, who visited South Africa in August, gave his blessing to Botha and a slap to a black leader, Archbishop Desmond Tutu: "I think he's a phony as far as representing the blacks is concerned."

In September, with Congress about to impose sanctions against the white-minority government, Reagan found it expedient to move first. Sales of gold Kruggerands, exports of computers that could help security forces and most loans to the South African government were banned.

For the first time since Reagan took office in 1981, the Kremlin had a vigorous leader, one who looked less susceptible to colds than his three aged predecessors. Mikhail Gorbachev showed an unaccustomed flair for public relations, including a handsome wife who wasn't dressed like a sack of potatoes.

Reagan's summit with Gorbachev in Geneva produced few concrete results, and neither did Nancy Reagan's "summit teas" with Raisa Gorbachev, but it was a high point in a difficult year for the president.

Reagan had surgery for intestinal cancer this summer, and later had a patch of skin cancer snipped from his nose. Republicans in Congress nearly derailed his campaign for a simplified tax code, and his visit to a cemetery in Bitburg, West Germany, where SS veterans were buried only managed to open old wounds.

Nicaragua's Sandinista government declined Reagan's invitation to cry "uncle," but President Daniel Ortega's ill-timed visit to Moscow saved the administration's military aid program to the Contras, just after Congress voted to kill it.

The president "pounded a few walls" in frustration this summer as Shiite militias in Beirut held 39 American hostages from a hijacked TWA plane, but the hijacking of the cruise ship Achille Lauro handed Reagan a rare opportunity to strike back at terrorists.

The hijackers murdered one crippled American, then made a deal with Egypt to be turned over to the Palestine Liberation Organization. U.S. jet fighters, however, forced the hijackers' plane down in Italy.

While Washington exulted, Egyptians protested vehemently. When the Reagan administration criticized Italy for releasing suspected hijack leader Mohammed Abbas, Bettino Craxi's government collapsed in the uproar.

Egypt was much tougher in November when an Egyptair jet — the same one forced down in Italy — was hijacked. After the hijackers shot four passengers, killing two, Egyptian commandoes stormed the plane; 58 people died in the gunfire and flames.

The year of terrorism ended with a bloody attack on airports in Rome and Vienna on Dec. 27. At least 16 people were killed and more than 100 wounded.

One man was killed as explosives sank the Greenpeace ship "Rainbow Warrior" in New Zealand, but that didn't count as terrorism in some books because it was carried out by the French government.

At home, two families that spied together got caught together, and a big-shot defector defected again.

John A. Walker Jr., 48, a retired Navy communications specialist, pleaded guilty to espionage and conspiracy as a Soviet cat's-paw for 17 years. He faces a life sentence.

His former wife tipped the FBI — not knowing her son was involved too. "How can a father do this?" Barbara Walker said.

Her son, seaman Michael Walker, 22, also pleaded guilty while Uncle Arthur was convicted by a jury. John Walker's friend, Jerry Whitworth, awaits trial.

Diplomatic ties between devoted allies were strained when Jonathan Pollard, a civilian Naval intelligence analyst, was accused of selling information to Israel. His wife, Anne Henderson-Pollard, was accused of trying to peddle some secrets to China.

In all, 11 spy suspects were arrested in the United States this year, but America's spooks thought they had evened the score by bagging Vitaly Sergeyevich Yurchenko, a KGB bigwig who defected in Rome.

Yurchenko reportedly exposed the Soviets' use of "spy dust" to track Americans in Moscow, solved the disappearance of a Soviet defector and fingered one spy suspect.

Then Yurchenko defected again, to Moscow. He claimed he had been kidnapped and drugged, even forced to play golf, during "three horrible months" in the CIA's clutches.

Faced with a growing insurgency and political unrest, Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos called elections for next year. His opponent, Corazon Aquino, says she might put Marcos on trial for the murder of her husband, Benigno, if she wins.

In December, a court absolved 25 soldiers and a civilian who were charged with conspiracy, thus placing sole blame on an alleged communist agent who was killed at the scene of the 1983 assassination.

Imelda Marcos rejected charges that she and her husband ran a corrupt regime. "I would not look like this if I am corrupt," she told an interviewer. "Some ugliness would settle down on my system."

One of the year's most fascinating stories turned on a lie told by Cathleen Crowell Webb. She had lied, she said, in accusing Gary Dotson of raping her 1977. A judge and the governor of Illinois came away convinced she was lying now.

In March, Mrs. Webb filed an affidavit saying she had made up the rape story because she was afraid her boyfriend had made her pregnant. She had become a Christian, she said, and her conscience tormented her.

Dotson was released on bond in April but was back in prison the next week, because a judge didn't believe Mrs. Webb.

Old evidence — semen stains, hairs, contradictory alibis — was dredged up and minutely examined. At a three-day clemency hearing in May, Mrs. Webb's former boyfriend detailed their love life, on live television.

Gov. James Thompson said he believed Mrs. Webb had told the truth eight years ago, not now. Nonetheless, he reduced Dotson's sentence to time served and released him because of "the larger quality of mercy — of compassion for one's fellow man."

Mrs. Webb and Dotson then made a triumphant tour of the morning chat shows in New York and even kept their dignity as Phyllis George of CBS chirped, "How about a hug?"

There was bad karma in Oregon, and some good buys on Rolls-Royces. Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh copped a guilty plea on federal immigration charges and returned to India, angrily shaking the dust of America from his sandals.

"I never want to return again," he declared. Not that he could; that was part of the plea bargain.

There were red faces in Atlanta, as the Coca Cola Co. admitted it goofed in changing its recipe. So old Coke came back as Coke Classic.

Anyone for Yuppy Classic next year?

Not so much dead this year as dismissed, yuppies came to stand for just about anything you disliked: greed, shallowness, a lemming-like fashion sense and a torrid romance with the self.

One defensive trend-setter confessed to the New York Times that he could no longer buy imported cheese or "a feisty little Beaujolais" without feeling like a cliche.

There was a new yearning in the land for meatloaf and mashed potatoes, a nostalgia for small-town verities which made Garrison Keillor's "Lake Wobegon Days" a best-seller.

Not that Madison Avenue had abandoned the chablis set. Your better beers, yogurts and vintages still begged to be part of their endless frat parties at work or play.

The big bucks, though, were with the Bud and Miller drinkers who waved the flag in endless TV spots; rugged, reliable folk who shook off each morning's hangover to Build America.

Even Prince Charles and Princess Di paid tribute to the resurgence of middle-brow America by visiting a Penney's store in Virginia. Giving the royal once-over to a display of junior wear, Princess Di pronounced, "It's very new and different, isn't it?" She wasn't seen buying any.

IRS's monument to incompetence

By Robert Walters

If there is a shrine for taxpayers who have yearned for retribution against the Internal Revenue Service, it is a squat, undistinguished building on the northern edge of this city.

It is here that the IRS finally has received its comeuppance, suffering through the misery, humiliation and embarrassment it sometimes imposes upon taxpayers.

The list of recent calamities at the IRS Philadelphia Service Center is a catalog of virtually everything that could have gone wrong — including massive computer breakdowns, major management miscalculations and employee incompentence of extraordinary magnitude.

Item: Earlier this year, a maintenance employee examining a trash barrel on a loading dock came across more than 100 envelopes containing scores of tax returns and checks totaling $330,000 — all of which had been thrown away.

Item: On two occasions last year, dozens of tax returns that had been processed at the center were discovered by custodians after they had been dumped into wastebaskets in women's washrooms.

Item: As many as 175,000 taxpayers in the Mid-Atlantic states have received notices from the Philadelphia Service Center incorrectly alleging that they were delinquent in submitting returns or payments to the IRS.

In addition, there have been recurrent reports of frustrated employees shredding, stuffing into drawers and carting away countless returns to avoid having to process them.

The numbers of returns run through paper shredders has been variously estimated at 7,000, 20,000 and 50,000, but those allegations have never been confirmed and IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. says the claims are "sheer, utter nonsense."

On the other hand, an investigation completed last month by the General Accounting Office showed that the Philadelphia Service Center was ahead of the nine similar IRS facilities in every category of incompetence and inefficiency.

The service centers, which process all tax returns, are located in Philadelphia; Atlanta; Cincinnati; Andover, Mass.; Austin, Texas; Brookhaven, N.Y.; Fresno, Calif.; Kansas City, Mo.; Memphis, Tenn.; and Ogden, Utah.

All received new mainframe computer systems last year, but only in Philadelphia did the transition to the new equipment become thoroughly befouled by both technical problems and personnel inadequacies.

The subsequent errors and delays in processing returns produced a deluge of telephone calls and correspondence from indignant taxpayers — which the service center also was incapable of handling.

During much of the crisis, the public was misled and deceived by the IRS, which refused to acknowledge the extent of the disaster until congressional committees, newspapers and the GAO launched independent investigations.

The one-story building here, which sprawls over an area the size of six football fields and employs about 3,800 people at the peak of the tax season, serves Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

The service center managers say they are "deeply concerned" about their battered reputation and claim to be "working diligently" to make needed improvements in time for the 1986 tax season.

But even before the recent spate of severe problems was disclosed, the Philadelphia facility had a reputation for rudeness and insensitivity in dealing with the public. Letters are unanswered, telephone calls are ignored and payments are unrecorded in many instances. Other service centers have their share of problems (IRS officials acknowledge that a supervisor at the Austin site last year ordered the shredding of 6,000 letters of complaint from taxpayers) but Philadelphia's last-place status remains undisputed and unchallenged. (Robert Walters writes for the Newspaper Enterprise Assn.)

Selective Service System

Young men born on or after January 1, 1960 are required to register with Selective Service within a month of their 18th birthday.

The registration process takes less than five minutes at the post office. A young man fills out a simple form asking only for his name, date of birth, address, telephone number and Social Security number.

Registration helps keep our country prepared with a pool of names to draw from in case of a national emergency... without interfering with people's lives. When you think about it... that's not a lot to ask for a country as great as ours.

IT'S QUICK. IT'S EASY. AND IT'S THE LAW.

some think they are cool because this will be the tenth anniversary of greeting the New Year with fireworks in Boston, the Chinese are the ones who invented them in the first place and have been kicking off their year (currently the year of the Ox) like this for centuries.

Not everyone, whatever their heritage, has the same headlong enthusiasm for first night activities.

How many times have you felt compelled to kiss some unfamiliar man or women who has been chewing on onions all night just because you happen to be in the same room when the little ball drops in Times Square? How often do you wake up with your suit or dress torn and a head that feels like the Southeast Expressway during construction?

The real joy of New Year's Eve can be lost in the often obligatory party or restaurant scene. Many is the time some normally mild-mannered carpet crawler — donning lampshade on head — has pushed his or her bosses' face into a punchbowl at the office party.

New Year's Eve has become somewhat akin to Ted Mack's Amateur Hour, where those who total tea during the other 364 (or 365) days of the year suddenly grow horns and turn into satyrs upon imbibing the fruit of the vine.

It is the season to be jolly, or so the greeting cards say, but there are many for whom the only difference between Dec. 31 and May 31 is the weather.

The pressure to go out and celebrate — created years ago and cultivated by mass media — can often be destructive. One only has to glance at suicide statistics to see that those who are lonely to begin with often feel even worse when they see all those happy, smiling faces running out to the local "packie" in television or newspaper advertisements. Many others also get the urge to go out and burn cars or break windows, whether there is a full moon or not.

Many, however, think otherwise.

That difference in opinion is, as they say, what makes America great. New Year's Eve, especially when spent with good and true friends, can also be one of the best times of the year. While it may sound sappy, to indulge one's self in the company of loved ones — singing Auld Lange Syne — can be a perfect way to look back and remember the good times, forget the bad times and revel in the joy of the moment.

Despite the somewhat cynical viewpoint, this is not a lecture on morality. Personally, I happen to enjoy a few belts on New Year's Eve or any other for that matter. I consider myself very fortunate that I have many good friends with whom to share my joys and sorrows and my fondest New Years memories are of the times spent in a cabin in New Hampshire, drinking, singing, dancing and playing poker with people I have known for years. Otherwise, New Year's Eve would be just another night.

As I gear up for the Eve, I can't help but wonder if Pope Gregory XIII knows what havoc he hath wrought.

Frank talk from Barney

issues that are unpopular nationwide."

While there will be no Kennedy in the White House come 1988, Frank does not rule out future bids.

"When Ronald Reagan lost to Richard Nixon in the 1968 primary, everyone thought he lost his last chance to run for the Oval Office," he says, "Who knows what will happen? It is much easier to look two years down the line than seven or 15."

Much closer to the present is the race for the 8th Congressional District seat being vacated by O'Neill. Scratching his head, Frank likens that contest to the mad dash for the money in a popular 60s movie starring dozens of the best comedians of that time.

"I guess you could call it the Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad, World of the 8th District," he says. "Think about it. The movie starts out when Jimmy Durante — who hid all the money — dies. While Tip didn't die and didn't hide any money, his retirement has sparked a lot of interest by a lot of good people."

Among those "good people" is Edward Kennedy's nephew Joseph — whose main claim to fame other than his name is the Citizen's Energy Committee.

"I think Joe has a strong name recognition and he has a good track record of helping people with Citizen's Energy," Frank says. "I think that is a big advantage, especially in a race where you have eight or nine candidates with strong liberal tendencies. That becomes a big factor when you consider that 64 percent of the voters in the predominantly white 8th voted for Mondale in the last election."

Frank, however, refuses to support any candidate in a field that includes State Senator George Bachrach, State Representatives Thomas Vallely, William Galvin and Thomas Gallagher, former Boston mayoral candidate Mel King and James Roosevelt.

"There are just too many people who I agree with to make a choice," he says. "If it came down to one person who I agree with and one person I don't, then I could make a choice. Right now, though, I won't."

Switching gears, Frank criticized the recent summit meeting between Reagan and Soviet Premier Mikhail Gorbachev as being too little, too late.

"There was not a lot of real meaning to come out of the summit," he says. "Ronald Reagan did in his fifth year what most presidents do in their first. Also, it was a 100 percent turnaround from when he used to scoff at Summit meetings."

Frank says his major criticism of the way Reagan handled the summit is his insistance on staying with the so-called "Star Wars" space weapons program.

"I recognize that the Soviets are not the heros here," he says. "Theirs is a system that is morally rotten. We may not like them, and they may not have the best intentions for us, but I think we both have to realize that each of us has the power to blow up the whole world. Even if Star Wars was 100 percent effective, which no one except Reagan says it can be, the Russians will find some way of getting around it. We have to work together to insure the survival of the planet."

Frank also leveled criticism at the Russians. He adds that despite the fact that Yelena Bonner was allowed to come to this country — a visit made possible in large part by Frank's efforts — the Soviet Union has to do something about thousands of Jews and others in that country who want to seek new homes.

"I know that there are more people who are being allowed to leave," Frank says, "but it's hard to say how many. I really don't know."

Of course, no interview of Barney Frank is complete without a question about how he dropped nearly 75 pounds since 1983 in a profession where you eat as often as you shake hands.

"Food was a very important part of my life," Frank says. "I like to eat. Food made me feel good. What really made it difficult was the fact that during an election, I would go to 10 or 12 events a day, all of them centered around food — be it bagels or lasagna. After '82, I knew that if I did a good job, I would have a job that I could hold onto for a while. I wouldn't have to be on the campaign trail as much and I told myself that food would not be as important as it was."

With sheer will and a secure job, Frank managed to slim down from 273 pounds to "between 195 and 200 pounds these days." The secret, he says, is learning to say no.

"One of the reasons I like to talk about my weight loss," he says — throwing in that he will be in the January issue of People — "is that people realize what I am up against and it makes it easier for me to say 'no' and to do so without offending anyone."

All in all, Frank projects the picture of a man who is satisfied. He is satisfied that he does not to run for Ted Kennedy's seat and satisfied that he does not have his waistline, either.

Keverian gets good grades

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Speaker George Keverian earned praise from Garden City representatives who found themselves on opposite sides of the House leadership fight that pitted Keverian against former Speaker Thomas McGee (D-Lynn).

Rep. David Cohen — a staunch Keverian supporter who was named Chairman of the Committee of Bills in Third Reading — credits the new House leadership for streamlining the legislative process.

"Of course, being a member of that leadership, I am a bit prejudiced," the chairman of the House Committee on Bills in Third Reading says, "but from a process point of view we were able to pass a significant number of bills in the last few hours. Also, I think the leadership was responsive to new members and legislation that will help their communities was passed. That is a tribute to the openness of the process."

He adds that Keverian had a good rookie year.

"The Keverian style is to give a lot of authority to committee chairmen and members. He charged committees dealing with sensitive matters come up with a consensus position and supported it. If anything, this year shows that you can have a House which operates under pricinciples of openness and encouraging participation and still come up with a final product. We passed a good deal of major legislation that in the past was hung up for years and we did it through a process I think we can all be proud of."

Rep. Joseph DeNucci, who despite voting for McGee retained his chairmanship of the House Health and Human Services Committee, says he has no problems working with the portly rep from Everett.

"There are two different styles between Tommy and George," DeNucci says. "Tommy wasn't afraid to call the Ways and Means Chairman and tell him to get a bill up to the floor. George lets the process handle itself and lets each chair have a free rein. Both styles are good and there is a lot that can be said for each."

DeNucci, one of the few legislators to hold a chair under both Speakers, says that each style has merit, depending on the situation.

"At times we need a McGee tactic," he says. "On the other hand Keverian's style is working well. He is letting the process work itself out. I had no problems with past leadership and no problems with the present one."

World's largest bridge tourney at Marriott

NEWTON — The single-largest "individual" tournament in the bridge world will be held Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 3-5, at the Newton Marriott Hotel.

Known as the William Keohane Regional Individual Competition, the event is expected to attract more than 900 participants. The three-day tournament is sponsored by the New England Bridge Conference, which is part of American Contract Bridge League.

Competition, including a charity program, begins Friday evening and the benefits will go to the Arthritis Foundation. There will be two sessions on Saturday to qualify in the "Individual" program and the finals will be held in two sessions on Sunday.

The William Keohane Regional Individual is named for the late William Keohane of Wellesley. Mrs. Keohane continues to participate in these tournaments.

Friction in future for Land Use Comm.

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The aldermanic Land Use Committee promises to be anything but dull next year.

Despite criticism that her two-year tenure of leadership has not been a good one, Cynthia Creem will return as committee chairman. She will be greeted by Alderman Richard McGrath — who is returning to the committee and says he will "ensure that it will be well-run."

"It was obvious that (Creem's reappointment as committee chair) was compensation for her support (of President-elect Michael Malec's successful bid)," McGrath says. "It is disppointingly clear. She knows what I'm like and if she's a good chairman, we will have no problems. If she continues to act the way she has in the past, she will have a lot of problems."

Creem says McGrath's charge is just a case of "sour grapes."

"It is obvious that McGrath would like to be chairman (of Land Use)," she says. "If he is sorry that he isn't chairmen, that's his problem. There was nothing between Mr. Malec and myself. I was the chairmen last year and the most qualified person to be chairmen this year. No one knows who I voted for. It didn't matter who was elected, because I spoke with all three candidates for board president."

McGrath, however, says he is out to change the committee's public image.

"Her tenure has not been a good one," he says. "It is obvious that we are going to change the perception of the committee held by the public that developers have the inside track. The public will have the same easy access to the committee as the developers have and I will see to that."

In addition, McGrath says he will insist that working sessions will more closely follow public hearings.

"We need to vote on these matters quickly before we forget what happened at the public hearings," he says. "I think it is important to dispose of these matters quickly so we alleviate the need to get caught up again. Also, there is a lot of wheeling and dealing going on with the developers. I want to eliminate the ability to wheel and deal."

McGrath adds that he "wants the work of this committee something to be proud of."

"If (Creem) continues to act the way she has," he says, "there will be confrontation because I won't be acquiescent to her moods and personality. It is more important to work on the agenda than to salve the feelings of a sensitive chairman."

Malec says he is aware of the criticism against Creem — in large part aimed at the number of times the committee has missed the 90-day deadline for voting on issues after the public hearing — and says that she has a "clear understanding of what is expected of her."

"I feel reasonably certain she can do the job every one wants from the Land Use Committe," Malec says. "I have reviewed certain complaints about these alleged deficencies and we have a clear understanding of the expectations for Land Use."

He adds that those expectations are no different than any other committee.

"I expect the committee's work to be well-grounded in facts, that the members do the necessary groundwork, that the committee's reports are timely and clearly written and that the floor debate is conducted at a high professional level."

New census to probe city's racial makeup to what they see as a "big brother" attitude on behalf of the government, Licarie acknowledges that his office will field a number of phone calls.

"I want people to know this is not my idea," Licarie says. "It is a law, and I have to carry it out. If somebody calls in and says it is unconstitutional, I will send them a copy of the general law and have them talk to the ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union) or their own lawyers.

He adds that the questions will be asked only this year and will not appear on the 1987 census.

In addition to the new questions, the census will ask for information on voting registration, name, sex, date of birth, occupation and nationality of each household member. Licarie says that information will be used, among other things, to update street listing, voter registration lists and determine eligibility for elderly services.

According to Licarie, every year the city saves space on the census form for other city departments to gather data from the public. Aside from the demographic questions, this year's census will include the public survey mechanism for the Village Study — an ambitious planning effort aimed at guiding the city's development over the next several decades. The survey will ask residents to name the village they live in and to identify the nearest commercial center. Also, there will be a list of subjective questions asking what types of commercial establishments they would like to live near and the quality of existing centers.

That information, says Licarie, will go to the Planning Department for use in conjunction with information gathered by Connery Associates — the consulting firm hired by the city to conduct the study.

This year's census form will include a questionnaire asking households for a rating of various city services, including law enforcement, traffic control, planning and development, education, health and social services and recreation. Licarie says these "attitudinal" questions — which will also be sent to the Planning Department — will help department heads keep track of how the public perceives their effectiveness.

Licarie says he expects "70 percent" of the questionnaires in his office by the end of January and "close to, if not 100 percent" returned in time to meet state deadlines. He adds that very few people refuse to comply, although those who procrastinate face a visit from the police.

"It is mandatory that everyone comply," he says, "and I urge people to do so promptly, because I would be forced to send the police, and that is an expensive proposition."

Those refusing to return the questionnaire face a $500 fine or imprisonment of up to one year.

Changes set for board working with a committee of experienced aldermen."

Reilly says his predecessor, Elaine Gentile, will be a hard act to follow.

"I would like to follow Elaine Gentile's lead," he says. "She was a very qualified chairperson and I hope to be as good as her."

Reilly, who says he was informed of the appointment the day after Christmas, says it is "too early to be thinking about making any changes.

Reilly's appointment came despite the fact that he voted against Malec in the race for board president.

"I was an early and unabashed supporter of Verne Vance and I gave his seconding address," he says. "Michael understood this when he approached me. While I thought Michael was a good candidate, I just think Vance was better."

Barker, who will chair the Special Zoning Committee, says it will concentrate solely on the Zoning Review Committee's (ZRC) recommended changes in zoning ordinances. He says he expects to have a copy of that report "within the next few days."

The committee's job, according to Barker —who supported Malec's bid from the start — will be to schedule the public hearings and working sessions.

"By law, there will have to be public hearings on the proposed zone changes," he says. "We will have to schedule them carefully. The main thing I have on my mind is to sit down with the committee and the Law Department before filing any notices for public hearings and divide up the ZRC report into sections that are related in subject matter. I want to make sure we can handle the subject matter of the public hearings."

Barker says the first public hearings will begin sometime in February, and estimated that the report could be enacted "by the end of June" depending on how long it takes to go through the hearings, aldermanic committees and floor vote. He adds it will be a long process because of the amount of discussion the report will generate.

In addition, Barker says he hopes the public will get involved.

"These are some very important issues that will affect the lives of people in this city for the next 25 or 30 years. I hope that people do show an interest in the process."

Creem agrees that Barker's committee will be important.

"I think that the special committee is a good idea," she says. It is good that the ZRC's recommendations be looked at separately because my committee (Land Use) will have to implement the changes. I think that is important that they are reviewed independently to give more aldermen input into the changes."

Do homework for antique auction

By Gary Krino
opley News Service

The antique auction circuit can be as exhilarating as seeing Paris for the first time or as horrendous as mistaking a sexy lingerie store for your grandmother's favorite retail store while chauffeuring her on a shopping tour.

Antique auctions can offer some good buys and some not-so-good buys. What it boils down to is: You'd better know what you're doing once the auctioneer starts his machine-gun chatter about Chippendale this and Hepplewhite that.

And please keep your hands at your side if you're not bidding. Something as seemingly innocent as raising your hand to scratch your nose could be construed as a bid by the auctioneer, and you'll end up being the not-so-happy owner of, say, a French armoire that looks more like some schlock discount house reproduction than something from Marie Antoinette's bedroom.

The keys to playing an antique auction right are knowing what you're after before you start to bid, knowing what you're willing to shell out and then sticking to that figure.

Once you know what you want and what you can afford, the next step is to find a catalog that describes the items that will go on the block. It will give you valuable information about the pieces, including such important facts as payment arrangements, when the items must be removed from the premises and who's responsible for delivering them.

Get to the auction early so you'll have time to give the item a good once-over. Check the condition of anything you might want to bid on and look for marks of authenticity — a signature, date or mark that validates the age or the maker.

Realize that the rarer a piece is, the more you should expect to pay for it. If the piece happens to include fine silver or brass trims or stained or beveled glass, it'll make a difference in price, too.

If you come across a piece you like but it's in need of repair, figure in the repair costs before you decide what you're willing to pay. And don't bid on any item you haven't thoroughly inspected. You might not be able to see flaws or broken pieces from a seat halfway back in the auction crowd.

Plan to spend several hours or even a whole day at an auction. Cutting yourself short of time might mean that you'll have to leave before the item you want comes up for consideration.

And don't assume that just because there are four chairs in a set, you are bidding on the whole set. Get your multiples straight or else you might bid what you think is a fair price for the set and go home with only one chair.

If you've checked antique shops and priced what you're interested in before going to the auction, know that what you should pay at the auction is about two-thirds of the price you saw in antique shops. And don't get antsy and over-anxious when something you want comes up for bid. Such shenanigans could tip off the auctioneer, who then might engineer bids to take advantage of your I-gotta-have-it attitude, and you'll end up paying more than you should have.

The keys to playing an antique auction right are knowing what you're after before you start to bid, knowing what you're willing to shell out and then sticking to that figure.

Furniture stores fight back with selection, price

By Sarah Stiansen
UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK — Furniture stores are fighting back, wooing a generation of taste-conscious status seekers with service, selection and price.

The last decade has brought on hard times for many furniture retailers. Squeezed by growing imports and stiffer competition from department stores, discounters, antique stores and designer showrooms, going-out-of-business tag sales have been a common fate for furniture stores.

But despite the problems, retailers are learning to adapt to new market conditions, offering extended service and selection at better prices to stay in the game.

Just about 80 percent of America's furniture is bought at a store specializing in furniture, rather than a department store with a furniture department, according to the National Home Furnishings Association. Total annual dollar volume is expected to exceed $24.4 billion in 1985.

If you throw in floor coverings, antiques and contract furniture, the annual retail figure balloons to about $100 billion.

Like fashion, the furniture business depends on its markets to introduce retailers to the latest styles. But unlike fashion, furniture is basically resistant to seasonality.

"There are very few seasonal things," said John Holman, owner of Adele Hunt's Furniture and Studio in Dallas and president of the National Home Furnishings Association.

There are some exceptions. Labor Day, for example, is a terrific time to pick up some new patio furniture.

Summers are generally slow, and stores are more likely to have more sales and special offers, as is true in January, with retailers clearing out overstock and getting inventories in shape for the year ahead.

One bonanza for shoppers — and problem for sellers — has been a sharp increase in imports. Taiwan and Korea, for example, with their low labor costs, are able to export cheaply and have a strong presence in the moderate to lower-priced end of the furniture business.

The American Furniture Manufacturers Association and the Commerce Department estimate that imports of furniture — primarily wooden — grew by 45 percent in 1984, aided by strength in the U.S. dollar.

Wooden furniture from Taiwan jumped 55 percent in 1984 to $587 million. And imports from Denmark climbed 52 percent to $170 million in 1984.

Also pressuring retailers are an army of discounters advertising dramatically lower prices.

Despite that pressure, Holman urges shoppers to be wary of the tradition of phony list prices in the business, keeping a sharp eye on the actual selling price.

"In spite of all the phony claims that are made in the industry, the markup is basically the same for each store," he said. Generally, full-service furniture stores — those offering delivery, warranty and credit services — have a markup of about 40 percent.

The average net profit in most stores is about 3.5 percent. "Furniture is a real bargain," Holman said.

One thing furniture retailers do have going for them is customer preference. The National Home Furnishings Association estimates that about 80 percent of all furniture purchases are made at furniture stores, making them far more popular than designer showrooms, department stores, antique shops or the ubiquitous discount store.

Discounters have sparked a trend toward a higher level of service at furniture stores. In order to be more competitive than a discount store, full-service stores are adding designers to the staff, who offer shoppers more expertise.

About two-thirds of Americans agreed that "quality furniture is best defined by reputation," that is, name brands, said preliminary results of a home attitude survey taken by Knapp Communications, publisher of Architectural Digest and Home magazine.

And 44 percent described decorating their home as an "ongoing interest."

"We didn't expect the number to be anywhere near that high," said Robert Brown, vice president and associate group publisher for Knapp.

Despite the continued interest in furniture, "people don't redo their houses more than twice or three times in a lifetime," Holman said.

The biggest buyers of furniture are — you guessed it — yuppies, especially those 35 to 50. (Retailers are also honing in on other markets, such as a large number of older people moving from large homes to smaller townhouses.)

Baby boomers have outgrown the fu[illegible] furniture acquired in early and l[illegible]d less affluent housekeeping days. [illegible]ys. And Holman said the things they l[illegible]ey look for now in new furniture purch[illegible]rchases are something like a sacra[illegible]crament: "outward signs of sophis[illegible]phistication and success."

The [illegible]The yuppie-turned-decorator is also f[illegible]so firmly establishing a tradition [illegible]on of less formal decorating, match[illegible]atching casual decor with a more [illegible]ore casual lifestyle.

"It [illegible]"It can still be upscale and still be s[illegible] smart, but more comfortab[illegible]rtable," Holman said.

Y-p[illegible]Y-people tend to be very status consc[illegible]nscious, with oriental rugs and expen[illegible]pensive ceramics among the favor[illegible]vorites, he said.

Choosing a washing machine

By the Editors of Consumer Reports

Buying a new washing machine can be complicated. But the more you know about your laundry needs and the features available on different models, the easier it is to choose a machine right for your household.

Recently, Consumer Reports' engineers tested 13 top-loaders and two front-loading machines. All had the biggest tub offered by the manufacturer and most had lots of features.

Among top-loaders, the Maytag A712 was top-rated. It was relatively efficient with water, used a bit less electricity than the other models tested, didn't wrinkle permanent press clothes very much, deposited only slight amounts of lint and was quieter than most. It retails for about $600.

The Whirlpool LA9800XM, at about $550, and the Sears 23921, at about $575, scored nearly as high as the Maytag. But both were weak at extracting water during their spin cycles. In the past, Sears and Whirlpool washers have cost much less than Maytags — now their prices are closer.

If you prefer a front-loader, the White Westinghouse LT800E, at about $575, and the Wards 6514, at about $600, would be good choices. Each used water very efficiently.

Above all, you'll want a washer that's reliable. According to Consumer Reports' Annual Reader Survey, Maytag models have been the most trouble-free.

Elegant furnishings for bachelors

By Thomas Ferraro

ALEXANDRIA, VA. (UPI) — Oscar Madison could relax at my place. Felix Unger might walk out.

One any given day, the "Odd Couple" would likely find a tennis racquet in the hallway, a bicycle propped up against a living room desk, a softball glove atop the dining room hutch and just mustard and beer in the refrigerator.

Sure, it sounds like a condominium turned into a locker room for the "Over the Hill Gang." But I call it home...a simple one.

Except for a few indulgences — a glass parrot and wind chimes — it has none of that trendy stuff.

Instead, it is heavy on basics, some of it dating back to my days as a summer employee at V. Otillio & Sons Co., a demolition company in Paterson, N. J.

At the foot of the staircase is the maghoney coat rack I salvaged from a mansion I helped turn into rubble in 1967 while one of Otillio's sledge hammer wielding "college kids."

In the living room, beneath an English-style dart board, are two old ice cream parlor chairs and a cobbler's bench.

I got them for $30 from a junk store in Annapolis, Md., in 1972 shortly going to work for UPI in that state capital.

I still work with UPI, now in the nation's capital, where such ice cream parlor chairs and cobblers' benches are sold in fashionable antique shops.

Most of my furniture — two armchairs, a couch, a coffee table, a bed and the hutch — came from a chain of stores begun in the early 1970s by a couple of young college graduates who saw big bucks in shipping crates.

They turned the crates into indestructible furniture and I became among their legion of customers, buying a new piece every few years.

It all matches and last year, for just a couple of hundred dollars, I bought new cushions and covers.

It all matches. Even Felix would approve. Oscar wouldn't even notice.

Police, court briefs

Hubcaps stolen off Jackson Road auto

NEWTON CORNER — The hubcaps of a Chevrolet Corvette parked on Jackson Road were removed either Sunday night or Monday morning, according to police. The wheel guards are valued $140 each, police said.

Pedestrian injured on Wells Avenue

NEWTON — Mollie Wasserman of Millis was injured last week when she was struck by an automobile on Wells Avenue, police said. Wasserman, 27, apparently had parked her car on one side of Wells Avenue and was running across the street to get a newspaper when she was run down by a Needham driver who reportedly tried to apply his breaks to avoid hitting her, according to police. The car slid on a patch of ice and struck Wasserman, who was taken to the Newton-Wellesley Hospital, police said.

Fredette Road house is ransacked

NEWTON CENTRE — Assorted jewelry was among the items stolen in a house break on Fredette Road, according to a report received by police Saturday. Entry into the house was gained by smashing in the front door. Police said a front room and a bedroom were ransacked.

Stereo stolen from car on Nardell Road

NEWTON CENTRE — A factory-installed stereo tape deck was stolen out of a 1984 BMW parked in front of a house on Nardell Road Saturday. The stereo was worth $650. Police said there was no other damage to the car.

Cash taken out of Taft Avenue home

WEST NEWTON — Cash and jewelry were stolen during a house break on Taft Avenue Saturday. Police said $260 in cash, an 18-inch gold chain and other jewelry were missing. It is unknown how the thief entered the house, said police.

Cameras stolen from Langley Road store

NEWTON CENTRE — Two 35-millimeter cameras were stolen from the MediMart store on Langley Road Saturday. Police said two teenage boys were in the store looking at the cameras at the counter. When the sales clerk walked away for a moment, the two boys allegedly took the cameras, leaving the boxes they were in. The two cameras were a Canon worth $90 and a Fuji worth $120.

Charges dropped, woman agrees to pay

WEST NEWTON — A charge of failing to appear in court was dismissed Monday by Judge Monte G. Basbas against Pamela Kenney of Wellesley. The charge was dropped after the 27-year-old defendant agreed to pay $50 for a window in the clerk's office she allegedly shatter with a rock. She pleaded not guilty in district court on Nov. 13 to charges of breaking the window and being a disorderly person. She was released on personal recognizance and was order to appear in court on Nov. 16 to make restitution.

Vandals smash telephone booth siding

NEWTON — The glass siding of a phone booth at the intersection of Auburn and Melrose streets was smashed by vandals last week, police said.

Woman injured in two-car smash-up

NEWTON — A 27-year-old New York resident was injured following a two-car collision at the intersection of Washington and Walnut streets Sunday morning, police said.

Susan T. Fagan was taken to Brigham and Women's Hospital with visible signs of injury after she drove her car — 1980 Toyota sedan — through the intersection and smashed into a 1976 Chevrolet taxi being driven by Louis S. Lysius of Hyde Park, police said.

No citations were issued as a result of the accident, according to police.

Somerville man pleads not guilty

Burlington man fails to appear in court

WEST NEWTON — A default warrant was issued in district court Monday for a Burlington man after the defendant failed to appear to face a charge of making annoying phone calls to a Newtonville woman between Sept. 27 and Nov. 22. James Martinec, Jr., pleaded not guilty to the charge on Dec. 12 and was released on personal recognizance.

Rugs stolen out of vacant dwelling

NEWTON — A vacant home on Chestnut Street was broken into last weekend and two rugs were taken, police said.

Thirumalaisamy lifts South

Senior Pillan Thirmalaisamy put it all together Saturday, scoring 23 points, to boost Newton South past cross-town Newton North, 69-63, in a non-league matchup played at North High.

After hitting on only one-of-15 shots from the field in South's two previous games (both losses), Thirmalaisamy caught fire Saturday and canned everything in sight. Outside, inside, it didn't seem to matter to the 5-11 guard.

Even the foul shots, which had not come easy for Newton South lately, were dropping. Thirmalaisamy led South in the free-throw category also, hitting on 11 charity tosses to ultimately make the difference in the ball game.

South pulled away in the fourth quarter, powered by the outside shooting of guard Randy Collins and sophomore Gary Grossman. Collins started the final frame off for South, scoring two baskets to break a 50-50 tie. Grossman then added a way-out baseline jumper to put South up, 56-50, and North never regained.

North pulled within three, 64-61, off a Jim Giddon basket with 13 seconds left. Andy Merkin set the play up, re-stealing a South pass at midcourt, to send Giddon in.

Following an immediate timeout by North, Britt Ryan fouled Thirmalaisamy on the inbounds pass and the Lion guard sunk both free throws to make it, 67-61, South.

Grossman iced the game for South, scoring on a pair of free throws with four seconds left to put the Lions up, 69-61. North's Ryan rolled in a layup at the buzzer to account for the 69-63 final.

Andy Lockwood, North's big man in the middle, was not his usual self, having "played awfully hard" in a Newton North loss on Friday night. Phillipps said the big forward also had the flu.

Andy Lockwood however, managed a team-high 17 points and 10 rebounds. Teammate Ronny Coppola shot 6-for-17 from the field for 12 points and also added 10 rebounds.

Bourland sets record in BC Holiday Classic

Bourland finished in 7.7 seconds to snap David Vento's mark of 8.2 set last year.

"He looked sharp," Newton North track coach Hank Van Putten said of Bourland, "and he's running very smoothly right now."

Senior David Gates also represented North High well, finishing one-tenth of a second off the winning time in the 300 for a second-place finish overall.

"David was ahead of his man with 60 meters to go but he got caught right at the end," said Van Putten, who added that Gates, who finished in 33.2 seconds, had surpassed last year's personal-best time of 33.3.

Newton North's mile relay captured a third-place finish behind Lincoln-Sudbury and Nashua, N.H.. The team of Eric Cosentino, Jon Greenberg, Bourland, and Chris Rutan crossed the finish line in 3:35.3, one second behind first-place Lincoln.

"We're very pleased," Van Putten said of the relay's finish. "We've got some new runners (Cosentino and Greenberg) and they're going to get better and the (relay) team is going to get better."

Senior Jamie Kreider ran in a "crowded" two mile race and did not place. Van Putten said Kreider fell behind early and was forced to run on the outside for most of the first half-mile.

"He's learned from the experience," the coach added, "and we're hoping for good things from Jamie."

Saturday, Bourland will compete in the 55-meter hurdles and Rutan will run in the 500-meter race at the Brown University Invitational in Rhode Island. Newton North will also send a 4x400 and 4x200 relay squad.

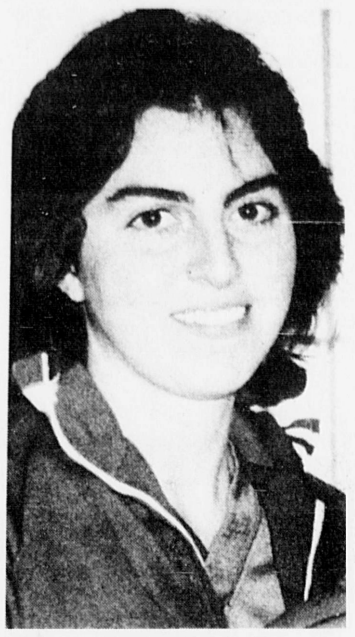
Antonellis milestone no surprise

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent



Katrina Antonellis

NEWTON — Mark Aronson had an inkling that Newton South High was getting something big each time he got beat in that old basketball game called "21."

Aronson, now the girls' basketball coach at South, was then a substitute teacher at Charles E. Brown Junior High. And in those days, five or six years ago, his "21" partner was a junior high student named Katrina Antonellis.

Now Aronson is no Larry Bird, but the Newton South graduate did lead the Lions in scoring in 1975, his senior year. In fact, Aronson led the team in free throws, which, for the benefit of those not familiar with "21", is the name of the game.

Today, Aronson can hold his head high when he speaks of a little girl from Newton beating him at his own game.

Antonellis, now a senior at South High, is in the sunset of an illustrious four-year sports career. Her latest accomplishment, her 1,000th career basketball point, was perhaps her greatest to date but it will not be her last.

The Lions were to suit up Monday afternoon at home against non-league Brighton and by that time, Antonellis could very well hold the all-time school scoring mark held by Meatchie Russell.

Antonellis needed a 29-point performance Monday to snap Russell's 1,059-point record set in 1984, and if the three-sport senior all-star does not set the record in that game, she will most certainly do it in the next one. The Lions will play on Friday at Boston Latin.

A three-year starter and all-star, Antonellis has averaged 20 points a game throughout her career, and the odds are that the hoopster will continue to do so.

She had a 38-game streak spanning her freshman, sophomore, and part of her junior year in which she scored in double figures. Antonellis has led the South girls in scoring for two years running, and last year she was the Dual County League's Most Valuable Player.

Entering the season, Antonellis needed just one point to make 1,000, and when the Lions opened the year at home against Weston on Friday, it was almost guaranteed that she would break it in the first few minutes of the game.

She did. With South trailing, 4-0, Antonellis took a pass from the top of the key. From 15-feet out on the left, she canned her first shot of the game to break the barrier at the 2:13 mark.

"I was real nervous before the game," Antonellis said afterward. "I felt like I didn't want to shoot. But when I did I was very relieved."

For Aronson, it was also a big thrill. He had coached Antonellis since her sophomore year and had relied on the hoopster's talents time and time again.

"She's just amazing," Aronson said as he gave a warning of things to come. "And she's improved. She's always been a great shooter but she was more of a set shooter. Now she can put the ball on the floor and hit that jump shot."

She certainly can. Antonellis went on to score 32 points in the season opener despite having Weston players draped all over her. The result of that close defense was costly for the opponents as Antonellis hit 16-of-18 shots from the free throw line.

"She's been a 75-percent foul shooter throughout her career," said Aronson, who can take partial credit for Antonellis' percision shooting from the line. All those games of "21" have done some good.

While Antonellis has averaged 20 points per outing so far in her career, Aronson said he is going to need just a few more from his big gun this year.

"We have to look to get 20-25 points a game from Katrina," he said. Aronson seems confident Antonellis can do it, even with the special coverage she attracts, which is why the coach is looking forward to the record on Monday.

Russell scored well over 400 points in his final two years at South to become the school's all-time scoring leader. In his senior year, the DCL MVP was one hoop away from 500 points and led the Lions to an 18-5 mark.

"It's not a goal I had," Antonellis said of Russell's record, "but it's something that I'd be very proud of."

As far as the all-time girls' scoring mark goes, Aronson guessed that Antonellis broke the record early.

"I can't imagine that the record could have been more than 600 points," he said. "And Katrina broke that during her sophomore year."

Yes, even in only her second year at South High, Antonellis was turning heads with her athletic abilities.

In basketball, of course, the 5-7 forward has held the spotlight for three years. This season, the senior should again lead the team in scoring while capturing her fourth straight all-star selection. And then there's a second MVP award to think about.

In soccer, Antonellis just finished her second season as team captain and has led the Lions in scoring for the past two years. This past fall, Coach Chuck Hurwitz moved her to stopper, the last spot on the defense before the goalie, and Antonellis still led the Lions in scoring.

A starter in soccer since midway through her freshman season, Antonellis has been an all-star for the past two years.

A three-year all-star shortstop on the softball team, Antonellis will undoubtably be a key in Coach Larry Caranfa's plans again this spring.

Following high school, Antonellis said she would like to continue with athletics in college while studing child development. Aronson said schools "have been pretty low key" but added that several area colleges have expressed an interest in Antonellis. Among the schools Antonellis is considering is Bentley College in Waltham.

Sports is nothing new to Antonellis. The youngest of Louis and Grace Antonellis' seven children, Katrina got plenty of exposure to the world of high school athletics as a youngster.

Starting with Tom, who played high school baseball in 1970, Katrina got plenty of coaching and tutoring from her four brothers and two sisters.

Danny was a member of the 1972 hockey team at South while Jerry was a basketball teammate of Aronson in '74-75. Michael, a 1981 graduate of Newton South, was a two-year Dual County League all-star in football and a senior all-star in basketball.

Sister Benedetta played basketball for the Lions in 1977 and Paula did not play sports in high school.

Tigers girls avenge hoop loss

For the second straight season, Newton North went into the Haverhill game undefeated. Last year the streak ended there. This time, however, the Tigers downed the visitors, 51-47, last Friday to remain unbeaten.

Carol Ventura led the way with 22 points, with Carolyn Natale adding 10.

Aided by a strong press, the Tigers built a 26-20 lead at the half, despite the absence of point guard Wendy Rogers much of the way with foul trouble. Robin Silver and Diane Tormey shared the responsibilities.

North turned the ball over too often in the third, and Haverhill cut the lead to two. The visitors actually took the lead early in the fourth, but the Tigers battled back for the win.

Lions downed in gymnastics opener

NEWTON — Senior Whitney Dorf picked up three firsts, a second, and a third Monday in a losing effort as Newton South fell to Methuen, 82.9-80.8 in the season-opening gymnastics meet.

Dorf captured firsts on the vault (8.3), the high bar (5.0), and the parallel bars (4.8). The co-captain began the meet with a second-place showing in the floor excersise (5.2), and ended the competition with a third on the rings (4.0).

Newton South Coach Tom Steeves said the Lions were trailing by three points entering the rings, and although his team won the coach said it was not quit enough to pull out a victory overall.

"We were supposed to be strong on the rings," Steeves said, "but we kind of fell apart."

Dorf tied with teammate and senior co-captain Dave Albert for third on the rings while junior Dave Kalis finished second with a 4.2 score. Revere took first place in that event.

Newton South will meet Newton North on Friday at North High at 4 p.m.

Pick 5 North players Suburban grid stars

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

Going into the final week of the Suburban League football season, three teams had a chance to share the 1985 crown. Brockton won out, but it's not too surprising that those three clubs — Brockton, Waltham and Newton North — accounted for 19 of the 30 league All-Stars this year.

As befits a Super Bowl champion, Brockton led the way with eight selections, evenly divided between the offense and defense. The next team in line was perhaps a surprise, as Brookline came up with seven players.

Waltham and Newton North placed six and five players on the squad, respectively.

North's picks were Mark Adams, John Flynn, Scott Lanciloti, Demitri Diatchenko and Britt Ryan.

North Quincy put two players on the squad, while Quincy and Cambridge Rindge and Latin were represented by one each.

The Newton North players:

John Flynn — One of Newton North's captains, Flynn was called "the best nose man in the league," by Tiger coach Pete Capodilupo. "His great gift was the ability to inspire the other kids. He made the kids around him play at a higher level when he was on the field.

In addition to his duties at nose guard, Flynn contributed as an excellent blocker and inside runner at fullback. He even filled in as placekicker this fall.

Flynn wants to attend a small school next fall, and hopefully continue his playing career.

Scott Lanciloti — A very active defensive end, Lanciloti, along with Flynn, helped make the defensive line a strength for the Tigers this fall.

"He was always thinking," said Capodilupo. "He could anticipate other teams. He could sense things and do it on his own. As a coach I trusted him to do things on his own."

Very aggressive and boasting good speed, Lanciloti captains the wrestling team at Newton North and also plays lacrosse. Wrestling might be his best sport, though Capodilupo feels he could play football in college at the right program. Among the colleges Lanciloti is considering are the University of New Hampshire and the University of Vermont.

Demitri Diatchenko — Improvement is what every coach looks for, and Diatchenko gave that to Capodilupo almost every time out.

"He steadily improved," said the coach. "He became excellent at covering the pass as well as the run."

Diatchenko has deceptive speed, which many a ballcarrier found out in the fall. A tremendous classical guitarist, Diatchenko is aiming for the Ivy League next fall.

Britt Ryan — A three-sport player at Newton North, Ryan was a football captain and is serving the same function for the basketball squad now. He also plays baseball in the spring.

Ryan was a versatile on the gridiron. He returned kicks, was the club's top receiver, and usually went man-to-man on the other team's best back.

"He did all the tough jobs," said Capodilupo. "Because of that he probably sacrificed statistics. On another team he probably could have been a great running back."

Ryan is interested in Springfield, Merrimack and Northeastern, among other s[illegible]

Mark Adams — The only junior among the area players, Adams gained more than 1,000 yards to cinch a spot on the All-Star team. A captain-elect for 1986, Adams is "like having a coach on the field," according to Capodilupo. "He has a good sense of what we're trying to do."

Adams also learned how to run inside this year, despite being only 160 pounds.

"He runs harder than his size," said the coach. "He should be one of the top backs in the league next year."

Adams also plays hockey and lacrosse for the Tigers.

Newton North gymnasts win

Junior Tammy Goedken continued to shine as the Newton North girls' gymnastics team picked up its second win without a loss on Friday, a 91.7-60.3 decision over Arlington.

Goedken led the Tigers last season, and has picked up where she left off. All she did in this one was to win the vault, floor exercise and uneven bars, and finish second in the balance beam. She wound up with an all-around score of 27.2.

Classmate Niki Cradle had a good meet as well. She finished second to Goedken in the vault, floor and bars, and was runnerup in the all-around.

Senior Jen Lowney picked up the other first for Newton, winning the beam with a 5.3. Senior Jocelyn Glazier gave the Tigers a boost with her third in the bars.

The Tigers are off until Jan. 7, when they face a tough Brockton team at Brockton. The summary:

Newton No. 91.7, Arlington 60.3 Vaulting-Goedken (NN), Cradle (NN), DeYoung (NN) 8.1. Floor exercise-Goedken (NN), Cradle (NN), Powers (A) 6.8. Bars-Goedken (NN), Cradle (NN) Glazier (NN) 7.1. Balance beam-Lowney (NN), Goedken (NN), Barratta (A) 5.3. All around-Goedken (NN), Cradle (NN) 27.2.

North six surprises Somerville

WATERTOWN — Chuck Goldman made 28 saves in the Newton North net as the Tigers stung Somerville, 3-0, in hockey action on Sunday. The sophomore made at least 10 "outstanding" stops, according to North coach Jack Heavey, whose club upped its record to 3-1.

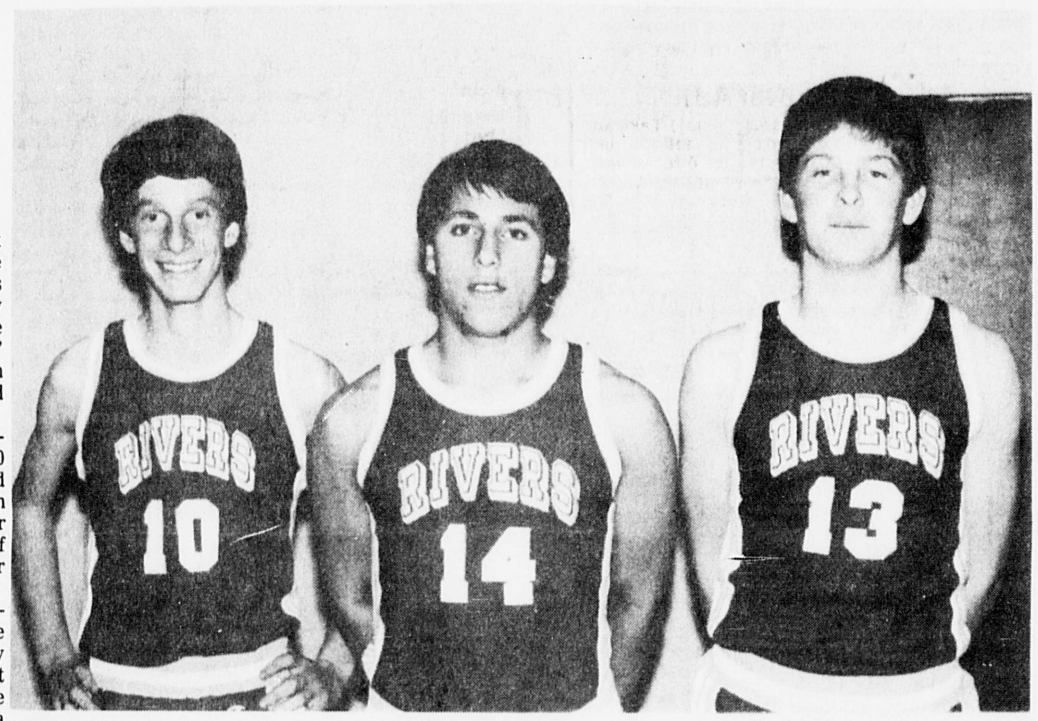
The Tigers made their opportunities count, taking a 1-0 lead in the first on a shorthanded goal by Rick DeSimone. With Tom Tocci in the box, the senior stole the puck near the faceoff circle and tossed a backhander into the short side.

Joe Proia made it 2-0 in the second on a hustling play. Mike Kornitzer gave the puck to Jay Cappello, who fired a shot that was blocked. A Somerville defenseman tried to block Proia out of the play as the puck lay in the crease, but the North sophomore dove his way in and stuffed it home.

Kornitzer added an insurance tally with seven seconds left in the game.

Heavey praised his defensemen, Rob Arone, Dave O'Connor, Dave Robinson and Dave LeConti, for their efforts in front of Goldman.

Somerville, though now 1-3, has played some very good teams tough this season. The Highlanders lost by only two goals to Waltham and North Quincy, expected to be two of the best teams in the Suburban League this year.



Rivers cagers

Newton residents playing basketball at Rivers Country Day School include (L-R) senior forward Ken Wolfe of Puritan Road, Newton Highlands; junior guard Lee Kaplan of Bruce Lane, Newton; and senior forward Paul Driscoll of Laurel Road, Chestnut Hill. Missing from photo is senior guard Victor Lebow of Burdean Road, Newton Centre.

Beaver five bows in tourney finale

AVON — The Beaver Country Day School hoopsters now know what its like to be on both the giving and the receiving end of life.

Last week, Beaver never trailed in a 62-34 Avon Tip-off Tournament win over Provincetown. But the next day was a different story all together as Beaver never led in a 54-44 championship-game loss to Blue Hill Regional.

Playing without Independent League Co-MVP Steve Silverman, Beaver took it to Provincetown early, leading at the half, 30-14.

Senior center Marc Bloc from West Roxbury led the way with 15 points and 12 rebounds while Steve Reynolds of Dedham scored 14. Brian Gardiner, also of Dedham, added 13 points and seven assists.

Newton's Rob Shapiro, a 6-0 senior forward, had 10 rebounds in the gamme.

Saturday, Beaver trailed 22-16 at the half before turning the ball over six times in the third quarter, all on the way to a 41-25 deficit after three.

In the fourth quarter, a Beaver pressure defense cut the lead to 10, but that was as close as it would get.

Gardiner led the Beaver scoring attack with 17 points while Reynolds chipped in with 13 points and nine rebounds.

Beaver, 3-1, will resume action on Jan. 8.

3 Newton Catholic starters return for volleyball season

With a strong stock of returning athletes and talented crop of newcomers next season, Newton Catholic volleyball looks to remain at the top in the Catholic Suburban South League next year.

Having just finished a 12-3 season overall (10-1 in the league) with their first-ever berth in the state tournament, the Lancers lose three starting seniors.

League MVP Joanne Abruzzi will be missed as will fellow seniors Cheryl Chagnon and Ann Kling.

Abruzzi, a four-year volleyballer and three-year all-star, was undoubtedly Newton Catholic's most consistant performer. Her serve ranked up there with the best on the team, accorrding to coach Rose Bertucci, and her spike was nothing to be taken lightly.

Chagnon, Abruzzi's co-captain, was also a four-year player and "had a lot to offer this season," according to Bertucci.

A spiker, Chagnon had an unusual way of slamming the ball, never actually leaving the ground. The senior's spike "sort of went up and then down, but it was still very hard," said the coach.

Kling will be missed, if for the sole reason that the first-year player showed so much potential. A natural athlete, Kling tried out for the team after the fall cheerleading squad followed the defunct football team, and according to Bertucci, learned very quickly.

Despite the loss of half of its starting crew, Bertucci looks on the brighter side. The cup is not half empty, it's half full.

"We should have a pretty strong team," Bertucci said. "We're losing the three starters but the other girls have been with the program two or three years. I expect great things."

Junior Mary Holland tops the list of returning vets, and at 5-9, is a big spiker. Bertucci said Holland improved on her serving this season as well as her bumping.

Junior setter Angela Canty will return with her top serve and is expected to be a big key in the Lancer offense. The most consistant server on the team this year, Canty was selected as a league all-star.

"Next year I expect her to be top notch," Bertucci said. "She did everything this season."

Freshman Linda Leary showed great promise in her rookie season and earned a starting spot as a setter. A graduate of the Bay State Games, Leary's serving as well as her setting helped the Lancers.

Sophomore Jean Diffley was a model of consistency for Newton Catholic this season and because she enjoys the sport, Bertucci said the 10th grader will continue to improve over the summer.

Dawn Foley saw action off the bench this season but is expected to earn a starting job next year. Bertucci said the junior should play as a server and is a very strong back-row player and passer.

Bertucci said the freshmen coming up showed a lot of promise. Michelle McLaughlin, Siobhin Walsh, and Karen Leary were all top players on the junior varsity squad and Bertucci said they should all make the big leagues next year.

The coach also said she has high hopes for junior Heather McIssac, and sophomore Susan Demeo.

South skaters overtaken by Medfield, 6-4

Newton South took a 2-0 first-period lead but it was an uphill battle after that as a quick Medfield squad dug deep for a 6-4 victory over the Lions in a non-league game played in Franklin.

Dan Monbouquette and Judd Cohen combined on first period scores to give South a 2-0 lead 10:51 into the game.

Monbouquette slapped home a Cohen pass from in front of the Medfield net at 7:32, then passed back to Cohen at the point for a power play goal at 10:51.

It took Medfield a little over one period to erase South's early lead and go up after two, 3-2. Eric Fuglestad started the offense off for Medfield, scoring at 11:32 of the first period to cut South's edge.

Linemate John Klenk tied the game three minutes into the second frame on a power play goal and, two and a half minutes later, Fuglestad added his second score to put Medfield up, 3-2.

Lion Ben Friedman tied the score midway through the final period to switch the momentum. South brought the puck across the blueline and into the corners, where Monbouquette dug the disc out and centered to Friedman in front. Friedman poked the puck through a scramble in front at 6:18 to knot the score, 3-3.

South matmen humble Natick, CM

Matt Malone and Rob Hillis pinned two opponents and Brad Walk had the first two technical falls ever for Newton South as the Lion wrestlers swept Natick, 31-24, and Catholic Memorial, 51-15, in a tri-meet on Saturday.

Walk achieved his wins under a new rule which calls for the match to be stopped when the point difference reaches 15, somewhat akin to a technical knockout in boxing.

Three other Newton South matmen, Bill Kuchar, Ron Vachon and Adam Gabriel, also won both of their matches on the day.

What particularly pleased South coach Chuck Hurwitz about the win is that his team was plagued by illness and still came out on top. Heavyweights Mike Levine (wrist) and Bruce Lindsey (illness) were out, so the Lions were down by six before the Natick match even started.

But freshman Kuchar came out with seven takedowns at 100 pounds to get South off to a good start with an 18-9 decision. Malone and Walk followed with wins before Natick got on the board.

Rob Hillis' dramatic takedown at 157 was the highlight of the second match, though the team outcome was never really in doubt.

North loses

The Newton North matmen had a tough day Saturday, losing three times in a quad meet held at North High.

In a 51-18 loss to Woburn, 147-pound freshman Matt Fortune won by a pin in 1:58, 157-pound Scott Lanciloti pinned his man in 2:54, and 187-pound Brian Claflin won by a pin at 4:47.

Winging it

Americans revel in the New Year

(AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev got time on American television along with parades and football, and Massachusetts lawmakers found it a work day like any other, but for most Americans New Year's Day was the morning after the fireworks and raucous parties the night before.

The 97th annual Tournament of Roses parade at Pasadena, Calif., drew a crowd estimated at a million, while 125 million more watched on television around the world. In Philadelphia, hundreds of thousands watched the gaudy costumes and fancy struttin' of the Mummers Parade.

TV coverage of the parades was interrupted for a recorded message by Gorbachev, who said through an interpreter that the Soviet Union "shall spare no effort" in working toward peace and avoiding a U.S.-Soviet nuclear war that "would be the greatest of tragedies."

President Reagan, in a speech on Soviet television, said Americans wish the Soviet people no harm and called for joint efforts to make 1986 "a year of peace."

In Boston, bleary-eyed state legislators began the 1986 session just hours after wrapping up 1985 because of a clause in the Massachusetts Constitution and a quirk in the calendar.

The constitution requires that "the political year shall begin on the first Wednesday in January." Thus, every seven years members of the House and Senate begin the year's business while most people take New Year's Day off.

The theme of the Rose Parade was "Celebration of Laughter," and nearly all 60 flower-covered floats showed humorous or lighthearted scenes. The humor award went to TransAmerica Life Companies for "Let's Get Physical" — three 23-foot ostriches in leg warmers.

Thousands of people dressed in gaudy costumes and huge, feathered headpieces danced and strutted Wednesday through the streets of Philadelphia for the 13-hour Mummers strut, before an audience estimated at 350,000.

The parade's clubs and string bands, members of the New Year Shooters and Mummers Association, spend more than $1.5 million decking themselves out to compete for $318,000 in prizes.

Elsewhere in Pennsylvania, as in many other states, police beefed up patrols looking for drunken drivers, and government and businesses joined in programs aimed at reducing the holiday traffic death toll.

The National Safety Council estimated that traffic accidents during the holiday period could claim between 130 and 230 lives. By 1 a.m. EST today, 157 people had been killed on the nation's roadways since 6 p.m. EST Monday.

Buses and trains were free overnight in New York and Chicago to encourage people not to drive after New Year's Eve drinking. And 13 cab companies around Chicago offered free transportation, for the first 20 miles, for people needing to get home from bars between 7 p.m. and 3 a.m. In Nashville, Tenn., about 400 people called police for a free ride home.

In Boston, police who turned out in force to monitor acceptance of Massachusetts' new mandatory seat-belt law snared 119 people on New Year's Day, the Department of Public Safety said.

Wednesday's activities followed New Year's Eve festivities that included about 100,000 people gathered in the nation's capital for the third New Year's Eve party in and around the Old Post Office Pavilion on Pennsylvania Avenue for rock music, fireworks — and ballroom dancing inside.

"Times Square has more of a history, tradition," said Mayor Marion Barry Jr. "But we're gaining on them."

Times Square drew up to 300,000 people who stood in the rain to watch an apple-shaped ball of lights drop to mark the last seconds of 1985.

Mickey Mouse was grand marshal for Tuesday night's Orange Bowl Parade in Miami, featuring 32 floats and 21 bands.

And up to 1 million people watched fireworks, ice sculptures, puppet shows and a parade and attended poetry readings and theater performances in Boston for the city's 10th annual First Night celebration.

A traditional New Year's observance in Detroit — firing guns into the air at midnight — was more subdued than in past years, when people have been killed or injured, police said. No firearms-related arrests or accidents were reported as of Wednesday afternoon, officers said.

Coogan wants 'his' money back

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON - Former Greater Boston Police Council (GBPC) administrator Timothy C. Coogan has responded to the multi-million dollar civil suit against him by demanding the return of the $130,000 left in the secret bank account he opened in the GBPC's name.

Coogan's counterclaim charges the city, which acts as the purchasing and fiscal agent for the GBPC, with violating the state's competitive bidding laws.

Meanwhile, the towns of Beverly and Brookline have joined Newton, Watertown, Walpole, Marblehead and Lynn as plaintiffs in the GBPC's suit against the 38-year-old Sudbury resident.

Papers filed in Middlesex Superior Court provide the latest twists in the burgeoning scandal that has drawn the attention of a federal grand jury.

The suit charges Coogan with fraud, conflict of interest, unlawful conversion, breach of contract and breach of fiduciary trust for his role in a scheme that diverted nearly $1.6 million in public funds into a secret Bank of Boston account.

Coogan allegedly used nearly $1.4 million of the money

Tennant making strong comeback

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

WEST NEWTON — Robert L. Tennant is recovering from a serious stroke by applying the same "no quit" attitude that has been the hallmark of his aldermanic career for the past two decades.

"I'm determined to make those meetings. I'm going to do everything I can to protect my ward and my constituents in this city," he said this weekend during an interview at his Mt. Vernon Street home.

The Saturday session represented Tennant's first public comment since a stroke left the Ward 3 at-large alderman clinging to life only three-and-a-half months ago.

Ironically, the 66-year-old insurance executive was in Newton-Wellesley Hospital recovering from surgery meant to prevent a stroke when a blood clot in his neck broke loose and travelled to his brain.

"If I wasn't in the hospital at the time, I would have been a goner. I think I did touch hands with God when it happened. All the bad things I had ever done in life passed before me," he said.

Margaret "Peg" Tennant, his wife for 37 years, added, "It was touch and go for 45 minutes."

The incident partially paralyzed the left side of Tennant's body, but did little to subdue his fiesty attitude toward life.

"The whole thing surprised me a little because I felt I was in damn good condition at the time. I took a half-hour swim at the Y every night for the past six years. But, I guess it can happen to anybody," he said with only a slight slur.

"I'm determined to be walking as soon as possible. I'm coming back, but I intend to come back faster," he added.

"The mind's willing, but the body's not able just yet," his wife reminded him gently.

'Enjoy life and enjoy your family because, when it comes down to the bottom line, it's your family that's important.'

Ald. Bob Tennant

After spending nearly a month in Newton-Wellesley, Tennant entered the Woburn Rehabilitation Center, a physical therapy facility owned by Boston Red Sox executive Buddy LeRoux.

"The people there are tough. They don't let you lay around, that's for sure," he said.

For the past month, Tennant, under the watchful eye of his wife and seven children, has been recovering at home through a rigorous schedule of occupational and physical therapy.

Next week, he will travel to his ranch-style home in Naples, Fla., just 45 minutes away from the reputable therapeutic facilities in Fort Myers.

Permit parking stalled

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON — A spiderweb of parliamentary manuevers has dealt a major setback to the passage of a resident sticker parking ordinance.

After more than an hour of debate and a series of narrow votes, the Board of Aldermen Monday night overruled an opinion issued by City Solicitor Daniel Funk and killed the permit parking proposal.

The board's decision means proponents of the item must jeopardize nearly two years of work and lobbying by taking the concept back to two aldermanic committees for approval.

A sticky dispute over whether the proposal survived the recent changing of the aldermanic guard set the stage for debate.

At the 1984-85 board's last meeting of the year in December, five aldermen chartered the permit parking item, effectively delaying final action on the item until the next regular board meeting.

At the same session, aldermen voted to refer all unresolved items to the 1986-87 board, which was sworn in last week.

However, because the parking proposal was not among the items referred to the new board, several aldermen argued that it could not be carried over to the next session and had died without action.

Acting on a request by permit parking supporter Alderman George Mansfield, Funk issued an opinion on the question.

He claimed that the matter was still pending before the board because the referral process was "simply a ministerial administrative procedure established by the city clerk" and, as such, did not affect the parliamentary rules set down by city charter.

"...The matter is still alive and should be taken up as a chartered item at the first regular meeting of the Board of Aldermen in 1986, which is the next regular meeting of the board," Funk concluded.

But several aldermen contested Funk's claim, arguing that the 1986 board, although having only three new members, was a different body from the previous board and could not act on the item without recommendations from the appropriate committees, which also feature different members.

Board President Michael Malec agreed with Funk's interpretation, ruling that the matter was properly before the board and could be decided.

Ceremony starts new terms

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — More than 200 people — in the wake of New Year's Eve festivities — attended the city's 73rd inauguration ceremony at City Hall last week for the mayor, aldermen and school committee members.

Three new aldermen, four new school committee members and a five-term mayor — along with 20 returning board members and four veteran school committee members — took the oath of office. Former mayor and current Justice Monte Basbas presided over Mann's swearing-in, while the mayor administered oaths to aldermen and the school committee.

"I am just so happy," Bryson said. "I have been looking forward to this for a long time."

Bryson was like the proverbial kid that finds the keys to the candy store. Looking around at all the people, and listening to the music from the All-Newton Music School — the Ward 4 Ward Alderman was in awe.

"I love the pomp and circumstance," she gasped.

Basham's reaction was much the same.

"This is a wonderful ceremony," she said. "I have never been to an inaugural ceremony before and this is very exciting."

Davidson said he was "ecstatic to be a new member of the board."

All the new members said they were looking forward to a productive year — eagerly awaiting the chance to put their individual skills to the test.

Bryson, who will sit on the Public Facilities, Legislation & Rules and Special Zoning Amendments Committees, said she Zoning dispute to supreme court

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The state's highest court has decided to issue a definitive ruling on a controversial legal battle involving the city's zoning laws and the concept of "family."

The case concerns Chestnut Hill residents Leon and Shirley Jaffe, who were convicted in July of criminal zoning violations for the illegal conversion and use of a Winthrop Street home as a multi-family dwelling.

The Jaffes were contesting the district court ruling in the Massachusetts Appeals Court, but, on Dec. 20, the Supreme Judicial Court exercised its power to hear important appeals of broad public concern and took the case out of the lower court's hands.

"They grabbed it," City Solicitor Daniel Funk said last week. "It's probably an indication that the court sees something in this case that they want to resolve."

Funk said he was "a little surprised" at the high court's interest in the wrangle, adding, "It doesn't happen that often."

The SJC's move will end with statewide consequences what began in the late summer of 1984 as an isolated neighborhood squabble between the Jaffes and a group of West Newton residents.

One of the neighbors whose "boarding house" complaints led to the city's crackdown on the Jaffes expressed anger at the couple and the latest development.

"They're just trying to win their own way and they'll do anything to get it. They're acting like little kids," said Joan K. Olsson, who lives on nearby Perkins Street.

Olsson described the backyard of the Winthrop Street property as "an absolute disgrace."

"There are a half dozen cars parked on the grass back there, one of them we think is abandoned. There's also two doghouses, a canoe ... and this is all squeezed

'Quality of life' to cost more

By Edward Cafasso
News Analysis

NEWTON — Zoning issues and money matters will be the "death and taxes" of life in the Garden City this coming year.

Aldermen will have the opportunity to exercise more control over the "quality of life" than ever before as they wrangle with the massive job of revising the city's zoning laws and the accompanying public pressure for a building ban until their work is completed.

Two financial headaches will confront residents - an inevitable increase in water/sewer rates and the utlimate pocketbook issue known as revaluation.

Meanwhile, the School Committee has assured no end to the city's labor unrest by granting teachers a lucrative three-year contract settlement that will serve as the hallmark for negotiations with municipal labor groups.

Given the potential consequences of all these decisions, 1986 could prove a watershed year.

The next three months will provide the most comprehensive survey and discussion of residents' feelings toward development ever.

Dozens of public hearings - at least one in each village - will take place as part of the city's ambitious Village Study. The two-year analysis is aimed at creating a comprehensive planning and zoning map to guide the city's development into the next century.

Residents will get an additional chance to shape the city's growth as aldermen sort through the zoning amendments proposed by the Zoning Review Committee.

Each potential change will require a public hearing and should provide some lively debate on the floor of the full board.

Bolstered by a 2-1 margin of victory at the polls, supporters of a temporary moratorium on most types of commercial construction have already docketed another building ban bill for action by aldermen.

That item will also require a public hearing.

It will be interesting to see how the recent election, in which three new aldermen took office, will alter the full board's previous 12-9 vote against an earlier version of the ban.

What will make these zoning decisions all the more important will be the fact residents will be paying more - much more - for the right to live in the Garden City.

An increase of approximately 50 percent in the city's water/sewer rates - the first hike in nearly five years - will probably take effect by February.

Students and teachers both savor new course

By Harriett Magee

A revolutionary new home economics course in the city's high schools has produced unexpected double benefits: While it has provided students with real hands-on experience in food preparation it has also provided teachers with some delicious, relaxing lunches.

Home economics teachers at Newton North and South have capitalized on the positive feelings between provider and consumer of good food by establishing a student-operated lunch service for faculty and staff in each school. While the vocational home economics courses were designed with a clear educational goal - to teach the art and science of quantity food preparation - providing teachers with an amenity has produced some unexpected benefits.

At Newton South, one of these benefits has been teachers observing student talents that don't always show up in a classroom setting. "I have had many teachers marvel at how competent the food program kids are," says Kathryn Daviau, home economics head at Newton South. She explained, "The students in Turnaround (a program for students needing a highly-structured curriculum) prepare and deliver lunch to faculty lounges Tuesdays and Fridays. Rachel Spiller's class prepares and presents a full cafeteria-style lunch to the faculty on Wednesdays in the Lion's Den. Both services are overwhelmingly supported - we always sell out.

"The program attracts a wide range of students and appeals to those interested in learning practical skills. Many teachers have written me notes or commented about how pleased they are to see some youngsters they had trouble reaching in their classrooms having a hand in producing such delicious meals. And of course it's great for the student's self-esteem to be complimented by a teacher.

"Given that teachers have a 30-minute lunch break, and have been on their feet and under the scrutiny of their kids all morning, you can be sure their compliments are sincere. They see the Lion's Den as an oasis - a place to eat, relax and talk with their colleagues. At every lunch the entree is sold out, and last year the husband of one of our teacher's used to come from his job in Needham to eat here on Wednesdays. After all, where can you get a homemade meal (everything is made from scratch, including the breads) for $2.50 and sit at table that has a cloth and flowers on it?"

Evening rec program starts

NEWTON — The Newton Parks and Recreation Department is sponsoring an evening recreation program at the Solomon Schechter School Gym, 60 Stein Circle, Newton Centre. The program operates on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m.

The schedule of activities is as follows: Monday: adult (16 and over) basketball; Tuesday: junior/senior high basketball; and Wednesday: junior/senior high floor hockey.

Please note that these programs will run only when the Newton Public Schools are open, and therefore will be cancelled on legal holidays, school vacation days and snow days.

Planning Department slated for review

NEWTON — The aldermanic Programs and Planning Committee soon is slated to review the city's Planning Department to get a better understanding of its organization and operation.

Chairman Louis Irwin and member Verne Vance said they plan to meet with Planning Department Director Barry Canner to discuss the department's function and staffing. That meeting is scheduled tentatively for Jan. 27, Vance said.

Irwin and Vance stressed the study was not in response to any department inadequacy. They said similar studies have been performed of the city's Assessing, Building and Clerk's departments.

"I think its performance is good," said Irwin of the Planning Department.

"My suspicion is that it has been delegated and given more responsibilities," said Irwin. "Because of that, it has a heavy workload and may be carrying out responsiblities not originally intended."

Neither Vance nor Irwin would say if the committee's study would lead to a recommendation to hire more personnel for the department. It is too early to speculate on what changes — if any — aldermen would consider, each said.

"Its resources, its workload is something we want to take a close look at," Vance said.

City still waiting for relief from Gloria

NEWTON — The city has applied for more than $1 million in federal and state reimbursements for damage caused by Hurricane Gloria, but it could be months before all or part of that money is received.

"I think as a matter of timing we should expect a good several months before we see actual reimbursements from the federal and state governments," said Richard Kelliher, the city's chief administrative assistant. "And we can only keep our fingers crossed as to what those amounts will be."

Gloria cost the Garden City an estimated $3 million in public property damage, equipment rental and employee salaries. The city is asking for 75 percent federal reimbursement on half that amount, though it is unclear how much of those costs are eligible, said Kelliher.

The state and federal Civil Defense agencies have made site inspections and are now determining exactly what expenses are eligible for government compensation, said Kelliher.

A bill to authorize $3,125,000 in state payments to commonwealth communities is now on the desk of Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, according to Myrna Malec, aide to Rep. Joseph DeNucci, D-Newton-Waltham.

She said she has received assurances from the governor's legislative aide that Dukakis will sign the bill.

Kelliher said he has his fingers crossed that this winter will continue to be a mild one. The city had to dip into emergency funds to cover immediate costs caused by Gloria in late September, he said. "We used virtually all our snow removal (funds)," said Kelliher.

Input sought on school hours structure

NEWTON — Citizens are invited to attend a public hearing on Jan. 9 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the Brown Junior High School Library for a specific purpose of providing input regarding the structure of the elementary school week.

Melvin Hines, Director of Elementary Education for the Newton Public Schools, will conduct the hearing.

Citizens unable to attend this hearing are encouraged to send written opinions to: Dr. Melvin Hines, Driector of Elementary Education, Newton Public Schools, 100 Walnut St., Newton.

Another 1st for Newton police officer

Newton Police Officer Stephen Walsh and his wife Janice scored a first for 1986 when daughter Stacey Lynn was born at WalthamWeston Hospital early New Year's morning. Walsh was cited early last year for his heroics in stopping a suicide attempt over the Mass Pike in Newton Corner.

Get on with unfinished business

Like most legislative sessions of the past, the 1985 sitting of the General Court never really ended. Resumption simply means going back to work on a lot of unfinished business. Those which are the most urgent have to do with court sentencing and Ethics Commission enforcement powers.

Both lost a chance at final enactment in the rupture involving the leaders of the two branches, who appear to be locked in a personal feud that may impede constructive action through the coming months. Not only are Senate President Bulger and House Speaker Keverian sensitive souls, but the two are on totally different tracks in philosophy and government. Bulger is rigid in the pursuit of old-style power politics; Keverian has made a modest but noteworthy attempt to introduce democratic process in the House. Each lost out on favored measures as a result of Bulger strategies that killed any chances of final approval of measures that had gone all the way to the House.

Presumptive sentencing would narrow the range of discretion a district court judge would have at his command in disposing of entry level criminal cases. The aim would be to provide for more fairness and uniformity for defendants without lessening the jurisdiction. A judge who wanted to depart from the prescribed guidelines could do so with a requirement that reasons be spelled out in writing.

Some prosecutors are opposed. Their point is that a judge's discretion is usually based on long years of experience in dealing with individual cases and should not be impaired or restrained. Defense counsel might feel plea bargaining is curtailed. The opinion here is that fairness and uniformity weigh more heavily in favor of the specific sentencing formula.

A Supreme Court ruling that found a lack of punitive power in enabling legislation that created the Ethics Commission earlier in 1985 called for remedial treatment. While some lawmakers and public officials chafed under the regulation of personal activity bearing on conflict of interest, there has been universal agreement this was the finest anti-corruption initiative on Beacon Hill in recent years. Thus, it becomes vitally important, as in the case of the anti-crime measure, to give this priority in the current session.

After observing the disappointing finish, it is no wonder the limited session advocates are calling again for a drastic overhaul in General Court procedure. Count us in with those sponsoring bills for a six-month regulation session and provision for a special recall as circumstances dictate. Are you listening, Common Cause, Mass. Taxpayers Foundation and Citizens for Limited Taxation.?

Merits of busing overrated

By Kevin C. Kennedy

A recent strike by school bus drivers in Boston should serve as a reminder that we have, over the years, relinquished a good deal of control over our own school system to the local bus company.

With declining enrollment and the redistribution of students that follows, the costs of transporting students to and from school have risen until they a taking a substantial bite out of the school budget.

Those of us who, years ago, had to walk all the way across town to go to school still wonder what has given birth to the present situation. Walking home from school in the afternoon, except under the most horrendous weather conditions, was very often the best part of the day. For some of us, it was also the only real excercise we got.

The following are some thoughts of the great educator Horace Mann on the benefits of walking to and from school, taken from a letter he wrote while the location of a high school for the City of Newton was being determined. Obviously Mann would be surprised to find our efforts to insure the safety of our schoolchildren have created the complicated, expensive situation in which we now find ourselves.

"When I was a kid, we had it TOUGH! We didn't have Velcro, and so we had to learn to tie SHOELACES."

"Doctor H. Bigelow,

My dear sir, your inquiry respecting the expediency of establishing a high school at so great a distance from a majority of its pupils, I will reply to with pleasure; not at length, for I have not time, but according to the best of my judgment.

First, the inquiry does not relate to all the children belonging to a district, but only to those who are sufficiently advanced in age to be members of a high school — probably none below 13, and a majority of them equal to 15. Second, will it be injurious or beneficial to scholars of such an age to walk to school under all ordinary circumstances, a distance of from one to two miles — at the extent, four miles a day taken in doses of two miles each?

My ideas respecting physiology and hygiene would lead me to prescribe such a walk, or its equivalent in exercise of some kind, for every pupil over 12 years of age. You need not be told — no medical man, no observing man, tho' he be nonmedicus, needs to be told — that our youth are suffering from the disproportionate demands made upon their brain and nervous system, as compared with their muscular. Body and limbs are of little value without brain. Brain is of as little without body and limbs. The mind cannot digest knowledge unless the body can digest food, and physical health wears the most intimate relation to mental and moral, I should hesitate to take advice from doctor, lawyer, or minister who had been long, hypochondriac or bedridden.

Now, exercise — active exercise, as distinguished from passive exercise, which originates in the brain and is transmitted through the motory nerves of the spinal cord and does not originate in horse-flesh or steam power, to be transmitted through the spring seat of carriage or car — this kind of exercise is the indispensable, inescapable condition and prerequisite of health. That this is true doctrine I have no doubt, though I have some doubt whether you will find the community ready to adopt it and act upon it.

Probably they will sacrifice a few more generations in their blind idolatry to error; but that is no reason why you and I should not strive to stay these sacrifices as fast as we can.

Yours for Health and Temperance and Obedience to all God's Laws
Horace Mann.

P.S. I did not deem it necessary to make special exceptions for great inclemencies of weather — storms, snows, etc. — common judgment and prudence will provide for these."

Snappy sayings for the new year

Ben Wattenberg

Some people make New Year's resolutions. The resolutions are soon broken. So I have not suggested New Year's resolutions to you. (Anyway, I don't know if you should go on a diet.) Instead, as a post-New Year's offering, I put before you, not what to do for the rest of the year, but what to say.

The first thing I'd better say is that all of the quotations below are ripped off from a tasty little book of quotes entitled "The 637 Best Things Anybody Ever Said" by Robert Byrne (Fawcett $2.95). Of course, there is no reason for me to apologize for ripping off a quote book; after all, that's what the author of a quote book does — rip off other people's quotes.

In any event:

If you want to say something about our president, you may quote Bob Hope, who said, "Ronald Reagan is not a typical politician because he doesn't know how to lie, cheat and steal. He's always had an agent for that."

When you have heard the one-millionth story about how special-interest groups manipulate the budget process, you may say, "A government which robs Peter to pay Paul can always depend on the support of Paul." (George Bernard Shaw)

If your VCR is broken, and you can't fast-forward through the commercials about intimate bodily functions, and someone says, "Ugh..., how crude!" recall that almost 2,000 years ago Catallus said, "Oh, this age! How tasteless and ill-bred it is!"

If you want to say something perceptive about the foreign policy of hawks, say this: "The breakfast of champions is not cereal, it's the opposition." (Nick Seitz)

When handicapping the 1988 presidential sweepstakes: "The race may not be to the swift nor the victory to the strong, but that's how you bet." (Damon Runyon)

If the stock market keeps going up in 1986, you may quote Mr. Anonymous: "Nobody has ever bet enough on the winning horse."

For almost any despondent moment after observing Washington politics close up: "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just." (Thomas Jefferson)

To make sense of the global situation: "I went around the world last year and you want to know something? It hates each other." (Edward J. Mannix)

When you get scared about the latest new disease: "Men should stop fighting among themselves and start fighting insects." (Luther Burbank)

When a learned scientist explains anything: "We don't know a millionth of one percent about anything." (Thomas Alva Edison)

Ruminating about life and the publishing industry: "Anyone who eats three meals a day should understand why cookbooks outsell sex books 3-to-1." (L.M. Boyd)

In order to explain why people care about taxes: "I didn't want to be rich, I just wanted enough to get the couch reupholstered." (Kate Mrs. Zero Mostel)

In order to explain the philosophy of a conservative government: "When it is not necessary to make a decision, it is necessary not to make a decision." (Lord Falkland)

When you think you are going crazy: "The only normal people are the ones you don't know very well." (Joe Ancis)

Offering a nursery rhyme to grownups: "One, two, three, Buckle my shoe." (Robert Benchley. You may want to read this one again.)

To explain yourself to yourself, quote Anonymous again: "It takes about 10 years to get used to how old you are."

Happy New Year.

Duke is primed for re-election campaign

By James Simon

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, aided by political skill, some legislative luck and his new brand of cautious leadership, appears to be in a commanding position for the start of his 1986 re-election campaign.

Political friends and foes agree that Dukakis was successful in 1985 in continuing to remake his image from that of a tax-and-spend Democrat, a liberal who was hard on business and soft on crime.

The new Dukakis is now viewed by many voters as the man who signed the biggest tax cut in history, the governor who has encouraged business growth and job creation while zealously pursuing drunken drivers and tax cheats.

With no major Republican challengers on the horizon and his favorability rating high in the polls, Dukakis appears in a very strong position to win another term this fall — whether new Republican convert and former Gov. Edward J. King decided to run against him for the third time or not.

"Michael is in good shape because he has avoided making any controversial decisions. And therefore the perception is nothing is going wrong and he doesn't have any problems," says GOP State Chairman Andrew Natsios, whose own in-house poll late last year pegged the governor's favorability rating at 73 percent.

"Michael has lost his philosphical moorings. Michael will do whatever is necessary now to maintain his opinion ratings high, to avoid any issue becoming an issue against him this year, such as the surtax repeal and education reform," said Natsios, who also serves as a state representative from Holliston.

"Everything literally has gone exactly as he could hope," said Michael Goldman, a Democratic political consultant. "He has carefully picked his spots to hit and those to avoid. He keeps moving, and that's a sign of political maturity.

"He's reversed the impression that he was soft on crime. He's strengthened his relationship with the business community. Most importantly, he's been able to control negative stories about the administration — the losses are short term, the wins have a very long life, and that's the key to success," Goldman said.

The 1985 legislative year was important to Dukakis because he had little luck in getting bills through in 1984, when a bitter House leadership strugle disrupted the usual flow of legislation. Only one of the governor's top five priorities was approved in 1984.

The numerous failures allowed Republicans to claim that Dukakis, with his new style of working behind the scenes to build consensus on issues and avoiding strong public stands, had lost his touch as an effective leader on Beacon Hill.

The governor's batting average soared in 1985, due in part to Dukakis' good fortune in having George Keverian elected as the new House speaker. Keverian, eager to show his effectiveness, quickly pushed through many of the bills the governor sought, such as a mandatory seat belt law, an overhaul of the workers' compensation system, a Boston bailout bill and tougher penalties for polluters.

Meanwhile, Dukakis sought to win over his many critics in the business community. He cut the unemployment taxes paid by Massachusetts companies and sided with business development interests in several environmental decisions.

The governor also declined to push hard for a "unitary tax" on the out-of-state operations of Massachusetts companies, a tax which had been strongly opposed by high technology companes. He stroked the egos of many business leaders by conducting several highly publicized tours of the state's most innovative companies, looking for ways to help other Bay State firms.

Finally, Dukakis showed his political skill in handling several issues that were not his own. Faced with a proposed referendum to cut taxes, he suddenly ended his long-time opposition to repealing the $250 million-a-year tax surcharge and took credit for signing the biggest tax cut in state history.

When a move to restore the death penalty mounted, Dukakis helped persuade the Senate to kill the bill so he wouldn't have to take the politically unpopular step of vetoing it. After the Legislature made numerous changes in his education reform bill, he embraced the final product, enabling him to go from town to town in 1986 and announcing how much extra school aid they will receive.

"As a politician, I admire his skills. As a leader, I don't," said Natsios. "I think people who look to the next election before anything else do an enormous disservice to democracy."

Despite his popularity, Natsios predicted a Republican could defeat Dukakis in 1986 by "beating up on him constantly" in public statements, emphasizing the growth of the state workforce, and criticizing the size of state budget increases, which have been double the rate of inflation.

She's sick of grumbling about Boston Edison

Our Christmas began this year not with a bang but with a grumble. Why? Because our electricity went off yet again. According to the story we hear, at about 8:30 Christmas morning, a little squirrel managed somehow to fry itself on a Boston Edison power line in such away as to shut off power to parts of Newton and Weston.

This Christmas morning, with no tree lights, with a silent fridge, and freezer, with the family yelling. "No Power? Again ??" it occured to me that one could do worse that to oppose power failures and oppose them vehemently. Yessiree, Boston Edison those few holiday hours without benefit of your service did it. We've had it.

During the past few year, we've done without electricity at our house for more than 12 days. Two episodes occured after blizzards and one after Hurricane Gloria, of recent memory. While these trials are not on a par with earthquakes in Guatamala, they pile up. They make difficulties. They make it hard to view Boston Edison as our friend.

Would it be too tactless to remind you that, during these many and trying episodes, the phones kept working and the gas kept flowing? Would it hurt your feelings to be asked what the phone companies and the fuel oil companies have that you don't have? Could the problem have to do with effeciency?

Buried pipes or lines? I don't know. It just seems to me that a tiny little squirrel shouldn't be able to frazzle a great big power company, let alone do in parts of Newton and Weston, all on a Christmas morning.

Tell you what. Safe and cozy in your power plants, you may not understand how much trouble and energy it takes to cope with an electric power failure. You may not be aware of the wear and tear power failures can cause to persons, to persons' nerves, and to their budgets. You may not know how expensive and irritating life with flashlights, kerosene lamps and candles is, although many irrate customers have problaby let you know what havoc the lack of electricity has wrought in their freezers.

You may even think us resourceful Yankees should be happy to have to do without electricity. You may think these trials are good for our souls. You know what I say to that? I say Hogwash. My feeling is that we humans came down out of the trees eons ago in search of amenities and, by golly, having found them, we have the right to detest doing without them.

In order to insure that little squirrel did not die in vain, I have a plan, a plan that will, I hope, keep a tiny beast's memory fresh. I'm going to figure out some financial equivalent of what power failures cost us customers and then deduct the result from our next electric bill and see how you like them apples.

That's my New Year's resolution, belated but hearfelt. Put that in your computer and chew on it, Boston Edison.

Not all teachers will enjoy latest benefits

The Newton Learning Disability Teachers wish to respond to your recent article about the new three-year teachers' contract.

According to state law, all teachers are supposed to receive state professional development grants, except "substitute teachers and teachers-in-training." The L.D. teachers have been excluded from this money in the new contract. This exclusion means a continuing salary loss for us.

Additionally, we are disheartened by the contract's provision for a "new" salary schedule for L.D. teachers. We feel this is misleading, since it is only a multiplication of our hourly pay rates projected to a number of hours that we cannot possibly work. It misleads our colleagues and Newton parents into thinking that we have achieved a teachers' salary schedule, when, in fact, we are hourly teachers paid only for contact time with students. We continue to be unable to attend meetings with other teachers and parents.

We are professionals teachers, with master degrees, and certifications as classroom teachers and teachers of special needs students. Our administrators are happy to advertise the essential professional services we provide to Newton students but continue to pay us as hourly workers.

Proud of progress in battle against AIDS

The AIDS battle is far from won. As in all things scientific, several answers raise new questions.

Yet in Massachusetts we can take considerable satisfaction from the way in which local school committees, public health and safety officials, professional health and welfare groups, business and industry and organized labor, service clubs, religious groups, and the public in general have responded to community needs and concerns about this devastating disease.

Through a comprehensive community education and information campaign, Massachusetts residents are learning more about the transmission of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. In particular, people are learning more about the way in which individuals can protect themselves against this disease, which causes a collapse of the body's disease-fighting immune system.

There is ample evidence that Massachusetts residents now know that AIDS is not spread by a sneeze or a cough or through casual contact. They also know that the AIDS virus is not spread by flood, water or insects.

It is also clear that at no time in the history of public health and medicine has so much progress been made in so short a time in undestanding a complex illness. The medical and public health community of Massachusetts can take great pride in its accomplishments to date.

From all of us in the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, and on behalf of Governor Dukakis' Task Force on AIDS, we thank all of you for your cooperation and support.

Thanks for holiday help from Goodwill

We are grateful to local residents for donating time and money to Morgan Memorial Goodwill during the holiday season. Sharing your good fortune contributed to the gift of self help for the handicapped and less fortunate people we traditionally serve.

During the year, Morgan Memorial Goodwill trains more than 700 handicapped clients in vocational rehabilitation programs, sends more than 1,000 city children to our Fresh Air Camps in the country, educates troubled youth at the Hayden Goodwill Inn School in Dorchester, and serves more than 10,000 hot lunches to senior citizens. These programs are year around.

During the holidays, we try to help make it a real holiday for children, senior citizens and people with handicaps by reaching out with special holiday dinners, children's parties, and gifts of toys and warm clothing. All this is made possible through your generosity.

For most of us, the holiday season is a joyous time of hopes and dreams. For the growing number of poor children, the elderly, and people who cannot work because of handicapping conditions however, holiday joys are diminished by the struggle to survive. We hope our special holiday celebrations make it possible to temporarily forget the problems of unemployment, lack of affordable housing and poverty.

We are grateful to you for what we consider a partnership in giving and serving. Your support is crucial. Thank you.

Peace walk will span nation

Robert Walters

Offering predictions for the new year is a dicey business, but here's one that's virtually certain to come true: The most ambitious and elaborate anti-war demonstration in the nation's history will unfold in 1986.

It will be a peace march spanning more than two-thirds of the entire year, stretching across the entire continent, consuming a budget of at least $15 million and, if the organizers' dreams are realized, "touching the lives of 65 million people."

On March 1, some 5,000 men and women will gather at the Los Angeles Coliseum to begin the 3,235-mile coast-to-coast march. Their tents, supplies and equipment will be carried by a convoy of 75 trucks while the marchers will walk an average of almost 15 miles daily. On Nov. 15, their journey will end in Washington, D.C.

That odyssey will carry the participants into the Mojave Desert, through the snow- and ice-covered Rockies, across the Continental Divide at the 11,990-foot-high Loveland Pass, into the corn and wheat fields of the Midwest and through the industrialized cities bordering the Great Lakes before they reach the East Coast.

Although the march itself will last 255 days, the participants — including retired people, college students, members of the clergy, farmers and shopkeepers — will leave their homes, schools, jobs and families for almost the entire year. All are due here in Los Angeles in mid-February to receive briefings and undergo training.

The march was conceived by David Mixner, a veteran political organizer whose earlier successes include a 1969 anti-war protest that attracted an estimated 500,000 people to the Mall in Washington and was pivotal in turning popular sentiment against military involvement in Southeast Asia.

In the summer of 1984, Mixner says, his 7-year-old niece "told me that she didn't worry about what she was going to be when she grew up because she'd probably die first in a nuclear war."

That, he says, was his inspiration for organizing People Reaching Out for Peace or PRO Peace, which began operations here last February with a staff of only five.

Today, 85 paid employees and 150 volunteers are working on the countless logistical and organizational tasks that must be accomplished if the march is to be successful.

Dozens of celebrities — ranging from Barbra Streisand to Madonna and from Paul Newman to Sally Field — have agreed to provide contributions, endorsements or other forms of support.

A staff of volunteer attorneys is working on obtaining the estimated 12,000 parade, camping, speaking and other permits and licenses that will be required as the march proceeds through the big cities of Denver, Chicago and New York as well as the small towns of Crescent Junction, Utah; Willow Island, Neb. and Richfield Center, Ohio.

Advance teams are examining potential campsites, while Lauren Weingarten, a granddaughter of industrialist Walter Annenberg, is designing aesthetically pleasing yet highly functional tent villages that will be erected each evening.

Dispensed at those campgrounds will be everything from medical assistance and spiritual guidance to hot meals and daily mail. Marchers will have access to a laundry service and showers, a traveling radio station and portable telephones.

The marchers will be entertained periodically at USO-style road shows, but on most evenings they will share their concerns with members of the community through which they are passing.

On the next to last evening of the trek, the marchers — accompanied by supporters who have joined them on the East Coast — will mass in a circle surrounding Washington.

On the final day, if Mixner's dream comes true, as many as one million people will march into Washington demanding an end to the buildup of nuclear weapons.

Where you get your contacts makes a difference.

Because everybody's eyes are different, buying contact lenses isn't as simple as buying clothes. To complicate matters further, there are many different brands of contact lenses available today - each slightly different.

So where do you turn to be sure you get the right contacts for your eyes' prescription and chemistry? Well you could go to an eyewear store, buy a brand name and hope for the best. Or you could go to an eye doctor who has the training and experience to match the right contacts with a person's individual eye chemistry.

When you buy contacts at Cambridge Eye Associates, we offer you a fitting by one of our eye doctors for just $25 to $40, depending on the type of lens you choose. It includes a free in-office trial and a 15 day refund privilege. It's a small price to pay for being sure your contacts fit properly and comfortably - and a good reason to get your contacts from an eye doctor instead of an eyewear store.

So while it's on your mind, call Cambridge Eye Associates for an appointment and find out why we're New England's largest family of eye doctors.

Selective Service System

Young men born on or after January 1, 1960 are required to register with Selective Service within a month of their 18th birthday.

The registration process takes less than five minutes at the post office. A young man fills out a simple form asking only for his name, date of birth, address, telephone number and Social Security number.

Registration helps keep our country prepared with a pool of names to draw from in case of a national emergency... without interfering with people's lives. When you think about it... that's not a lot to ask for a country as great as ours.

Higher costs coming in 1986

By the end of the summer, however, a much larger problem will be looming on the taxpayers' financial horizon - the first city-wide revaluation in four years.

Bolstered by a historic boom in regional real estate prices, the assessed value of homes will jump significantly - so significantly that not even a major decrease in tax rates will prevent higher tax bills.

City officials will also face a number of important financial decisions.

Contracts with eight municipal labor unions are set to expire at the end of June and each will be looking for a settlement similar to the one given teachers, who received two consecutive 7 percent raises and one 6 percent hike.

City negotiators will have a tough time justifying a stance labor leaders are calling "elitist."

Meanwhile, police officers and firefighters, who have still not settled on 1984 contracts, are more than hinting at job actions to dramatize their demands.

The coming year will also provide more movement on the main library issue.

By the fall, a preliminary study of 76,600 square foot building at the corner of Homer and Walnut Streets should be completed, providing residents with their first glimpse at the planned $12 million structure and its impact on the city hall area.

The next step will be the appropriation of funds to start construction, a matter that will be made easier once the Bigelow Junior High School and long-vacant Warren Junior High School buildings are put on the market.

Money will also be a major topic of concern for the federal grand jury investigating the finances of the Greater Boston Police Council (GBPC), a voluntary law enforcement association headed by Police Chief William F. Quinn and based in Newton.

Quinn and other city employees involved with the GBPC's accounts have so far not been implicated in a scheme that saw more than $1.5 million in public funds diverted into a secret bank account.

But, with additional court hearings due in the lawsuit against former GBPC administrator Timothy C. Coogan, it remains to be seen whether the one man directly linked to the scandal will cast a shadow over other individuals.

Take the law to heart.

Zoning case goes to supreme court onto a postage-stamp piece of property," she said.

Although she praised the city's efforts to enforce zoning codes, Olsson said whether or not the Jaffes win the case "depends on how clever their lawyer is."

The Jaffes' attorney, Gerald S. Cournoyer, Jr., had filed a 51-page brief with the Appeals Court outlining the three basic questions on which his clients based their case.

The first asked whether the phrase "one family," as cited in Section 30-5 (A) of the city's zoning laws, "precludes the use and occupancy of a dwelling house situated in a 'single family' residence district by eight unrelated individuals."

Cournoyer's second question asks whether the zoning laws' failure to define the phrase "single family" make Section 30-5 (A) "unconstitutionally vague."

The final issue involves the question of whether property owners involved in such zoning cases can be convicted on a criminal charges if the city's zoning laws fail to define "single family" or fail to "set forth a description of what shall constitute the attributes of a structure suited for more than one family."

Cambridge District Court Judge Arthur Sherman had fined the Jaffes $12,000 after finding the couple guilty of illegally altering and using the single-family home at 58 Winthrop St. as a rental dwelling for eight unrelated individuals.

In his decision, Sherman said that, in order for the tenants to qualify as one family, "there must be some type of relationship among the occupants of a dwelling to constitute one 'household.'

"I find evidence of a complete lack of communal living (at 58 Winthrop St.)," he added.

The home contains two kitchens, eight bedrooms, three bathrooms, a pantry, storage areas and two common rooms.

Pines will discuss senate bid at reception

NEWTON — A reception for Lois Pines will be held on Sunday, Jan. 12, at 8 p.m. at the home of Tricia and Sanday Gadsby in Brookline.

Brookline and Newton residents will have the opportunity to meet Pines and discuss her bid for the Brookline and Newton State Senate seat which is being vacated by Jack H. Backman. No admission will be charged.

Pines, a tax attorney, has an extensive background which includes service as a three-term State Representative from Newton (1972-1978), and a New England Regional Director of the Federal Trade Commission (1979-1981).

She is currently serving as executive director of the International Coordinating Council, a non-profit organization supported by the public and private sectors. The mission of the International Coordinating Council is to encourage exports as well as the development of Boston and Massachusetts as a center for international trade and international tourism.

The Jan. 12 Sponsoring Committee includes: Beryl W. Cohen, Barney Frank, Claire and Milton Goodman, Caroline A. Graboys, Thomas B. Graboys, Ferris Hall, Nina Hall, Thomas P. Hennessey, Gail H. Hoffman, Anne Jackson, Mary Kelligrew Kassler, Claudette Markell, Stephen R. Morse, Carol Nadleson, Elizabeth S. Pollack, Ethel and Norman Sadowsky, Betty Taymor, Ann M. Wacker and Natile G. Zuckerman.

For further information about the reception or Lois Pines' candidacy, contact Gail Hoffman at 731-8452 or Jane Rutan at 965-0744.

Over the span of the next 45 minutes, 11 aldermen rose to take differing stands on Malec's ruling. Those who disagreed said further deliberation and fine-tuning would not hurt the proposal.

Alderman Paul Daley, who helped charter the item, said the move was aimed purposely at killing the proposal so that the problems with it could be worked out.

Mansfield admitted there were "some flaws" in the ordinance, but said it would be "a tremendous waste of our time and effort to go back and start anew."

In an attempt to break the impasse, Malec asked aldermen to suspend the board's rules in order to assign the item a new 1986 docket number.

That move failed by a 13-10 vote because it could not muster the necessary two-thirds majority.

Alderman Richard McGrath then challenged Malec's ruling that the item was properly up for board consideration.

Funk's opinion was essentially rejected on the ensuing roll call when 12 aldermen voted against Malec's judgment and 11 voted in favor.

Four of the five aldermen who originally chartered the permit parking plan helped overrule the chair.

In a last-ditch effort to stop the proposal from having to re-enter the committee process, Mansfield revealed that he had filed in December a motion to reconsider the board's entire "referral docket."

The referral docket item not only contained all the unresolved items from the previous term, but also the reaffirmation of all board votes taken in 1985.

Mansfield asked his colleagues to approve reconsideration so that the permit parking item could be added to the unresolved docket matters, a move that would have made the proposal eligible for immediate full board action.

Several aldermen argued that approval of Mansfield's idea would allow major votes that had nothing to do with permit parking to be challenged and possibly overturned.

"I think it's better to keep Pandora's box shut at this point," Alderman Bruce Carmichael said.

The temporary death knell for the permit parking proposal sounded when Mansfield's motion failed to muster the two-thirds majority needed for approval.

Coogan counters GBPC suit

for personal purchases, real estate deals and business ventures, including one with John Ackerman, who runs several communications firms in Waltham.

The initial court proceedings in the case resulted in Coogan's assets being frozen, except for a $1,200 weekly allowance that may be reduced at a later date.

Coogan's response to the suit denies every allegation lodged against him and raises questions about the GBPC's legal identity.

Ironically, Coogan even denied that he was the GBPC's administrator and says that Police Chief William F. Quinnn "informally granted" him the title of the "general counsel."

But the documents Coogan signed on April 23, 1982 when he opened the Bank of Boston account show that he represented his title as "general counsel" for the GBPC.

His counterclaim questions whether the GBPC is an unincorporated voluntary association with representative membership and whether the GBPC or its members have any legal right to the funds allegedly diverted into the unauthorized account.

Court papers filed by Pollenz claim Coogan earned the $1.56 million deposited in the account through a stipulation in his GBPC contract that allowed him to "engage in telecommunications consulting services" with other municipalities and institutions.

Coogan charges that the plaintiff communities are "guilty of inequitable conduct" because the collective purchasing contracts Newton entered into on behalf of the GBPC violated state laws concerning the "competitive and public bidding" of municipal contracts.

"The term of the purchasing contracts were beyond that which was permitted by law and the initial purchasing contract (for the Boston Area Police Emergency Radio Network) was renewed without submission to competitive and public bidding," Pollenz claims.

Newton has acted as purchasing and fiscal agent for the GBPC since the early 1970's, entering into contracts with vendors for police radio equipment and technical services.

The GBPC's first major contract created BAPERN.

At about the same time he opened the bank acount, Coogan allegedly received more than $250,000 from one of the GBPC's vendors for recruiting new members to join BAPERN.

He allegedly accumulated additional funds in the account by inflating the prices he charged new BAPERN members for equipment and services.

Coogan also claims the GBPC's collective purchasing agreements were illegal because the police forces from several private institutions and businesses were also allowed to buy goods and services.

He contends that Newton and the GBPC acted illegally last October when they convinced Bank of Boston officials to turn over the $130,159 that remained in the account.

His counterclaim seeks the return of the funds plus any lost interest and costs.

The GBPC's attorney, Thomas E. Dwyer, Jr., said this week he intends to respond formally to Pollenz soon.

"We have every confidence in the merits of this suit. The thrust of Mr. Pollenz's answer was contained in the motion to dismiss, which the court threw out in December," he said.

"Suffice it to say that we have not found any evidence of any illegal contracts," Dwyer added.

So far, Dwyer said, the GBPC's 50 members have agreed to appropriate close to $50,000 to pay for his services in the case.

Area's top law officials targeted for testimony

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON - The police chiefs in Newton, Needham and Norwood and the Garden City's top lawyer are among the individuals targeted for testimony by Timothy C. Coogan's defense attorney.

Papers filed in Middlesex Superior Court show Kenneth A. Pollenz is seeking to take depositions from at least 10 individuals who either worked closely with Coogan or were involved in the early days of the GBPC's work on the Boston Area Police Emergency Radio Newtork (BAPERN).

Among those served with a summons were Needham Police Chief Louis Roman, Norwood Police Chief George DiBlasi, Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn and City Solicitor Daniel Funk.

Court papers show that Pollenz also intends to take depositions from Sgt. John Roman, Capt. John Salemme, Joan K. Stuffle and Claire M. Frechette, all of whom work in Quinn's office at Newton Police Headquarters.

John Kreckler, the director of the New England Institute of Law Enforcement Management, was served with a summons from Pollenz on Monday.

Also on Pollenz's deposition schedule is Elliot Silverstein, a Boston attorney involved in the GBPC's initial work on BAPERN.

Court papers show that the depositions were scheduled to begin on Monday and last until later this month, but sources say that timetable has been delayed.

When contacted yesterday, Quinn, Roman, Funk and Kreckler all said they had "no idea" why Pollenz wants to take their statements in the case.

Kreckler confirmed that Coogan taught law enforcement courses at Babson College in Wellesley, where the institute is based, but would not comment further on his experiences with the 38-year-old Sudbury resident.

DiBlasi referred all questions to the Dwyer & Murray law firm, which is handling the GBPC's suit against Coogan.

DiBlasi and Chief Roman are members of the GBPC's Executive Committee along with Quinn, the GBPC's chairman for the past decade.

In a 1985 Newton Graphic story, Funk said that, in retrospect, steps probably should have been taken earlier to create a legal identity or structure to guide the GBPC's operations.

Frechette is the "principal clerk" for Quinn and has been an employee for the Police Department for the past 13 years.

Stuffle, a police secretary for the past six years, has submitted an affidavit on the GBPC's behalf claiming that she saw Coogan shred papers that may have been crucial to the case just before his contract with the GBPC expired last June.

Salemme, a 12-year veteran of the force, and Roman, a 25-year veteran, are both members of Quinn's support staff and have had dealings with Coogan.

In a 1985 News Tribune story, Silverstein questioned whether the massive growth of the BAPERN system was necessary and discussed the relationship between Coogan and Arthur Yefsky, the president of CES Telecommunications in Skokie, Ill.

GBPC communities paid CES hundreds of thousands of dollars to design BAPERN systems and to provide other technical services.

Beginning in 1982, Coogan allegedly received more than $250,000 from Yefksy's son, Michael, for recruiting new members to BAPERN.

In the early 1970s, Silverstein worked with Coogan and other GBPC members in his role as federal grants administrator for the Law Enforcement Assistance Association, which provided some of the funds to get the sophisticated communications system off the ground.

Culture Sharing plans smorgasbord

NEWTON — A movable feast planned Jan. 25, featuring international foods and entertainment, will benefit Culture Sharing Inc. Guests will gather for a smorgasbord of appetizers at the home of Jan Buechting, move on to a Chinese/Filipino banquet at Jane and Winston Chiong's and be treated to an array of international desserts at the Halligan/Sullivan home in Newton.

Entertainment at the last stop will feature Fortaleza, a spirited group that sings folk songs from the Andes mountains.

Culture Sharing Inc. was founded by Jane Chiong of Newton to promote cross-cultural understanding through the arts and education. The organization currently runs children classes at the International Institute and is planning a major culture-sharing festival for Boston this summer.

Culture Sharing Inc. has been funded, in part, by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities, the Boston Arts Lottery, the Newton Arts Lottery, and the Massachusetts Cultural Alliance.

Members of the Board of Directors include Patricia G. Goldman, chairman, Joan Chaisson, Winston Chiong, Dorothy Frauenhofer, Susan Halligan, Patricia Regele and Edward Schofield of Newton; Winston Langley, Brookline; Carol Porter, Wellesley; and Frank Liu, Boston.

For further information about the Jan. 25 benefit, please call 332-6241 or 244-2409. Tickets are available for either the whole event or for dessert and entertainment.

Tennant rebounds

license to fly himself down to the Sunshine State, Peg couched her reprimand in quiet laughter.

"She puts a chain around my leg every once in a while," he said with a wink.

"He's in my power now," his smiling wife chimed in quickly.

As evidence of his indomitable spirit, Peg recalled how her husband snuck out of his therapy sessions at Newton-Wellesley to do what he does best - sell insurance.

"I was getting so bored, I decided to go door-to-door. You'd be surprised how many people were interested," he said with a chuckle.

Again and again, Tennant steered the conversation back to political matters, specifically his plans to return to an active role with the Board of Aldermen.

Although he was hospitalized for the months preceding the recent election, Tennant polled 5,473 ballots citywide - the second highest vote total of any alderman.

He said he intends to fight Board President Michael Malec's decision to take away his seat on the Finance Committee.

"Malec's done a good job of putting the most eligible people with expertise in the right positions, but he bumped me off of FinCom. I'm a little upset about that because it's my area of expertise," Tennant said.

He hinted that he may regain his FinCom seat by switching committee assignments with Alderman Richard Bullwinkle, whom Malec had named to the committee instead.

Tennant, a longtime Kiwanis Club and Chamber of Commerce executive, believes his voice as "a business representative" is sorely needed on the full board.

"I don't feel business gets a break in this city. I've got a phobia about the way business people get kicked around here," he said.

His main goal this year is to "push hard" for the full board to lower the tax burden on commercial properties, an argument he has spearheaded unsuccessfully in the past.

Before that happens, however, Tennant is concentrating on shedding his arm sling and leg brace.

"My make-up is that I won't stay in one place for long. I'm always looking for excuses to get up and move around. I don't like to do things the easy way," he said.

Scenes from the ceremonies . . .

Swearing in

Newton's inauguration ceremonies included the swearing in of four new school committee members, three new aldermen and a five-term mayor, along with 21 returning board of aldermen members and four veteran school committee members.

sees the board as a way to extend her efforts as a community activist. Basham, who will sit on the Land Use, Public Safety & Transportation and Legislation & Rules Committees, said she would like to continue the work she did as a civilian on several ad hoc city-wide committees. Davidson, who manages 14 apartments, said he wants to put his business acumen to work in the Public Facilities and Legislation & Rules Committees on which he will serve.

In addition to swearing in their members, both the Board of Aldermen and School Committee officially voted on leadership positions. The board, by a vote of 22-1, accepted Alderman Michael Malec as their president and voted unanimously for Aldermen Elaine Gentile as vice-president.

Malec said he is looking forward to his presidency and that zoning control, a new library and signing a new solid waste disposal contract will be among the 1986-87 board's top priorities.

"These areas will involve several millions of dollars," he said. "In addition to those major issues, I think it will be important to take care of the comparatively very small, day-to-day needs of the citizens."

Malec said he expects the board's mood to be productive. The lone vote against him belonged to Alderman Richard Bullwinkle, who made his decision on the basis of what he said was a promise broken by Malec during his successful bid for board president. Bullwinkle accused Malec of breaking his word that he would not reappoint Alderman Cynthia Creem as chairman of the Land Use Committee.

"(Malec) called me up and told me that there was no way Creem would be the chairman again," Bullwinkle said. "It is hard for me to support someone who says one thing but does another."

Malec refused to comment on Bullwinkle's charge that he gave Creem a chairmanship in return for her support during the caucus.

Bullwinkle's strong criticism of Malec, and ensuing shouting match with Board Clerk Edward English, lent credibility to the old saw about the more things change, the more they remain the same. A statement last week by Alderman Richard McGrath that he will serve as a watchdog on the Land Use Committee, combined with Bullwinkle's latest uproar, served to forewarn board members that all is not calm, despite the festivity of the occasion.

Alderman Domenic Taglienti, who was watching the heated exchange of words between Bullwinkle and English over the makeup of the committee rosters seemed bewildered as he summed up the feelings of his colleagues, many of whom left the room shaking their heads after the brief tiff.

There was less animosity on the School Committee, which voted 7-0, with one abstention, to give Leonard Gentile his second term as committee chairman.

"I enjoyed the post during the two years I had it," Gentile said. "I am looking forward to serving as chairman again, especially since 50 percent of the members are embarking on their first term."

One of the major issues, according to Gentile, will be how the school committee deals with declining enrollment in the high schools while trying to keep teachers employed.

"As the population in the secondary schools drops," he said, "it will mean some tough choices for us in the future. If you keep the current student/teacher ratios the way they are, then you will have to lose some good teachers. We are looking for a way to balance that."

Committee member Lynne Sullivan — who abstained — said she did so not because she had problems with Gentile, but the way the process was handled.

"I object to the process because I don't think it allowed for much competition," Sullivan said.

The commitee unanimously voted for Angela Neilsen as committee vice-chair.

Differences aside, there was one thing all the newly sworn-in officials agreed upon: hoping for the quick and speedy recovery of Alderman Robert Tennant — who suffered a stroke last year.

Reading a note from Tennant, Alderman Wendell Bauckman said the Ward 3 alderman-at-large hopes to be working again as soon as possible — a sentiment echoed by all the elected officials.

Police, court briefs

Couple pleads innocent in dog charge

WEST NEWTON — Louis and Judith Cohen of Newtonville pleaded not guilty in district court last week to separate charges of failing to comply with an order by Police Chief William F. Quinn to restrain their dog. The defendants were released on personal recognizance and their cases were continued until Jan. 21.

Charges dismissed against juvenile

WEST NEWTON — Charges of breaking and entering with the intent to commit a felony were dismissed in district court last week against a 17-year-old juvenile by Judge Monte G. Basbas. The defendant allegedly broke into Highland Auto Parts on Station Avenue Dec. 24.

Woman suffers minor injuries in crash

NEWTONVILLE — A 22-year-old Brockton woman was injured in an accident last week at the intersection of California Street and Fair Oaks Avenue, police said.

Jaqueline E. Belleville suffered a minor visible injury when the car she was driving — 1985 Subaru sedan — was hit by a 1978 Cadillac sedan driven by Francis Cannistraro of Waltham on Dec. 31, police said. Cannistraro was cited for failing to grant the right of way to Belleville, according to police.

Arlo Road home heist nets jewelry

NEWTON LOWER FALLS — A house on Arlo Road was broken into and an undetermined amount of jewelry was taken, police said. Thieves entered the dwelling through a garage window and forced the back door open, police reported. The owners discovered the robbery when they came home on New Year's Day and found the front door open, according to police.

Violin stolen out of car at hospital

NEWTON LOWER FALLS — A $1,500 violin was stolen out of a car while it was parked in the Newton-Wellesley Hospital last week, police said. The violin and car, a 1972 Chevrolet Nova, belong to a Centre Street resident, according to police.

Man injured in car accident on bridge

NEWTON — A 44-year-old Newton man was injured in an accident on Sunday night while crossing a Charles River bridge on Nonantum Street, police said.

Herbert J. Dedoning suffered minor visible injuries when he lost control of his 1986 Jeep, reportedly due to barrels obstructing the roadway, police said. The vehicle rolled over several times, and the top of the Jeep was sheared off. Dedoning was brought to Newton-Wellesley hospital for treatment.

According to police, the barrels are MDC property intended to cover bridge repair work. Police said the barrels were unlit, and the MDC has been notified of the hazard.

Skidding accident inflicts minor injuries

WEST NEWTON — A 21-year-old Newton man was injured in an accident Sunday going westbound on Washington Street, police said.

Dole T. Harris suffered minor visible injuries when the car he was driving — 1978 Chevrolet truck — skidded on a sheet of ice and struck a utility pole head-on, police said. Harris was brought to Newton-Wellesley Hospital for treatment.

Plan your strategy for auction

By Gary Krino
opley News Service

The antique auction circuit can be as exhilarating as seeing Paris for the first time or as horrendous as mistaking a sexy lingerie store for your grandmother's favorite retail store while chauffeuring her on a shopping tour.

Antique auctions can offer some good buys and some not-so-good buys. What it boils down to is: You'd better know what you're doing once the auctioneer starts his machine-gun chatter about Chippendale this and Hepplewhite that.

And please keep your hands at your side if you're not bidding. Something as seemingly innocent as raising your hand to scratch your nose could be construed as a bid by the auctioneer, and you'll end up being the not-so-happy owner of, say, a French armoire that looks more like some schlock discount house reproduction than something from Marie Antoinette's bedroom.

The keys to playing an antique auction right are knowing what you're after before you start to bid, knowing what you're willing to shell out and then sticking to that figure.

Once you know what you want and what you can afford, the next step is to find a catalog that describes the items that will go on the block. It will give you valuable information about the pieces, including such important facts as payment arrangements, when the items must be removed from the premises and who's responsible for delivering them.

The keys to playing an antique auction right are knowing what you're after before you start to bid, knowing what you're willing to shell out and then sticking to that figure.

Get to the auction early so you'll have time to give the item a good once-over. Check the condition of anything you might want to bid on and look for marks of authenticity — a signature, date or mark that validates the age or the maker.

Realize that the rarer a piece is, the more you should expect to pay for it. If the piece happens to include fine silver or brass trims or stained or beveled glass, it'll make a difference in price, too.

If you come across a piece you like but it's in need of repair, figure in the repair costs before you decide what you're willing to pay. And don't bid on any item you haven't thoroughly inspected. You might not be able to see flaws or broken pieces from a seat halfway back in the auction crowd.

Plan to spend several hours or even a whole day at an auction. Cutting yourself short of time might mean that you'll have to leave before the item you want comes up for consideration.

And don't assume that just because there are four chairs in a set, you are bidding on the whole set. Get your multiples straight or else you might bid what you think is a fair price for the set and go home with only one chair.

If you've checked antique shops and priced what you're interested in before going to the auction, know that what you should pay at the auction is about two-thirds of the price you saw in antique shops. And don't get antsy and over-anxious when something you want comes up for bid. Such shenanigans could tip off the auctioneer, who then might engineer bids to take advantage of your I-gotta-have-it attitude, and you'll end up paying more than you should have.

Tips on cold weather safety

DEDHAM — Civil Defense Director Ralph Pope submits winter survival reminders to area residents:

The following general information will help you protect yourself against the cold tempertures this winter, by following the advise of Civil Defense Director Ralph Pope.

Check weather information on radio frequently. Avoid overexertion - cold weather itself puts an added strain on the heart. Dress warmly in loose fitting, layered wool clothing. Watch for frostbite- re-warm affected areas. Avoid alcoholic beverages. Keep yourself and your clothing dry.

If a person is overexposed, get that victim into dry clothing and a warm bed with a mild heat source; water bottle, heating pad, or warm towels. Concentrate heat on trunk of the body, keeping head low and feet high. Give the victim warm drinks never alcohol, sedatives, tranquilizers, or pain relievers. Keep the victim quiet - do not massage or rub.

When you are driving your car, especially in the cold winter months. Here are a few hints that should be followed. Check all fluids, tires, exhaust system, brakes, battery etc. Plan a winter storm kit for your car, such as matches, candles, extra clothes, blanket, first aid kit, flashlight, sand, shovel, tools, booster cables, canned nuts and fruits, etc.

Improvise a hub cap or visor for a shovel. Use your hub caps as a vessel to burn engine oil as a signal.

In an emergency and you have to drive, select primary and secondary routes. Seek local police advice. Travel if at all possible with at least two to three other persons. Travel in company with another car. Also keep gas tank filled, especially before entering open country. If a storm seems to much to handle seek shelter.

Tips for no-cost energy savings

By Janet Gordon
Copley News Service

Some people think energy conservation is a fine idea, as long as it's someone else who is making the sacrifices or paying the expenses for conservation measures.

These people often underestimate the benefits of putting a few dollars into energy-saving home improvements. They fail to realize how much money can be saved for the initial expense.

For these people a good place to start conserving energy may be to make changes that don't cost a cent. Whether a person already is serious about saving energy or just beginning to think that it might be a good idea, the advice that follows should be the basis of any energy-saving list. Taken from the Ortho book, "Energy-Saving Projects For The Home," these are some of the easiest, most commonsense free steps a person can take to reduce home energy consumption.

Refrigerator — Keep condenser coils clean for greater efficiency. — Turn off ice maker when not in use. — Keep doors tightly closed, open them only when necessary and close them as soon as you've put in food or taken out food.

— Cool hot foods before refrigerating. — Organize foods for ease in locating to minimize time with door open. — Cover all liquids — high humidity requires more energy.

Stove — If you buy a gas range, select one with a pilotless ignition. — Check gas stove flame color. Yellow traces mean burners may be clogged and require cleaning. — Self-cleaning ovens consume large amounts of energy, so clean them by hand.

— Defrost foods before cooking. — Use flat-bottomed pans with tight-fitting lids. — Use surface units when possible. Ovens and broilers require more energy.

— Bake several things at once instead of a single item.

— Do not peek into the oven while it's on. Each peek drops the temperature by 25 F to 50 F.

— Use toaster ovens, portable appliances or microwave ovens to cook small quantities of food. — Heat a ceramic tile while baking. Use the tile rather than the oven to keep rolls hot.

Dishwasher — Rinse dishes in cold water before placing them in the dishwasher. — Keep dishwasher drains and filters clear of debris. — Run dishwasher for full loads only.

Bathroom — Do not run hot water continuously while washing hands or shaving. — Take showers — they generally use less hot water than baths. — Take shorter and cooler showers.

Lighting — Turn off lamps when not in use. — Use the lowest setting on three-way bulbs whenever possible, particularly when watching TV. — Use lampshades with a white liner for better reflection. — Place work tables and desks near windows to take advantage of daylight. — Arrange lamps to reflect off two walls — more light is reflected than if the lamp is against one wall.

Heating — Keep windows clean to let in more sun. — Always keep heating sources clean. Dirty filters, grills and coils mean wasted energy. — Keep all exterior doors closed tightly. — Use shades, drapes, shutters or curtains on all windows — they slow heat loss through glass. — Keep drapes open on sunny days and closed on cloudy days and at night. — Keep indoor/outdoor traffic to a minimum.

Allison Baron and Bradford Casler

Allison Baron is engaged to marry Bradford Casler

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Baron of Livingston, N.J., take pleasure in announcing the engagement of their daughter, Allison Ivy, to Bradford Scott Casler, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Sheldon Casler of Newton.

Miss Baron attended Ithaca College and graduated from Boston University College of Communications. She is currently employed by Bloomingdale's of Short Hills as Assistant Director of Public Relations.

Mr. Casler, a graduate of Ithaca College, earned his Master of Business Administration degree at Suffolk University. He is associated with H. Lotman and Company of Brookline as a commercial real estate broker.

A 1986 wedding is planned.

Linda M. Spinney weds Robert Joseph Bergantino

Linda (Spinney) and Robert Bergantino

Agnes and Paul Spinney announce the wedding of their daughter, Linda Marie, of Brookline, to Robert Joseph Bergantino, of West Newton, son of Marie and John Bergantino.

The double-ring ceremony took place at St. Jean's, Newton, on Oct. 5 at 6 p.m. Rev. George DuFour, of Winchester, officiated at the wedding. The bride was given away by her father.

A reception followed the ceremony at the Stow Acres Country Club, Stow, Mass.

John Bergantino, of California, brother of the bridegroom was best man. Ushers were Paul Spinney Jr., of Brookline, brother of the bride, Glenn Spinney, of Brookline, brother of the bride, Brian Lally, of Waltham, nephew of the bridegroom, and Anthony Cirincione, of Flushing, N.Y., a friend of the couple.

The bride's dress was made of off-white satin with a lace neck. She carried a bouquet of silk pale pink and white orchids, white roses and stephanotis.

The bride attended Brookline High School and is currently an evening student at Massachusetts Bay Community College.

The bridegroom graduated from Massachusetts Bay Community College in 1981 and from Northeastern University, in 1984, with a major in accounting. He is currently a cost accountant/financial analyst in Milford.

Following a wedding trip to Hawaii, the couple reside in Milford.

Wedding Expo '86 will be Jan. 12

Bridal show set

On Jan. 12 Middlesex County brides-to-be will be able to attend the most exciting bridal show to date in Central Massachusetts.

Produced by Chevalier Promotions of Westborough, the show, called Wedding Expo '86, will be held in the Sheraton Tara Hotel and feature over forty displays and demonstrations of just about everything a bride-to-be would need for her wedding, reception, and honeymoon.

Categories include the latest bridal and formal wear fashions, flowers, invitations, wedding cakes, jewelry, reception facilities, photographers, travel agencies, limousine services, live and recorded music services, bridal consultants, furniture, hair and make-up salons, rental companies and other bridal-related services and items. Fashion shows will be held so that future brides can see the latest gowns, dresses, formal wear, and complete bridal party ensembles, together with the newest hair styles and make-up techniques. The fashion shows will be coordinated by Karon Shea's LaFemmina Modeling Agency and will feature live music from the top area wedding bands, according to Richard E. Chevalier, president of Chevalier Promotions.

Chevalier said that brides-to-be who attend will have a chance to win one of several major door prizes, including a Poconos honeymoon and free limousine rental. In addition, several thousand dollars' worth of other door prizes will be awarded and each bride attending the show will be given a personalized coupon book worth hundreds of dollars' in discounts on goods and services offered by exhibitors at the show.

Wedding Expo '86 will be held Sunday, Jan. 12, in the Sheraton Tara. Admission is $3 per couple with admission card picked up at bridal merchants throughout Middlesex County or at the door the day of the show. Additional guests are $2 each.

Robin Dorsey and Frederick R. Mayo are married

Robin Ann Dorsey and Frederick R. Mayo were married Oct. 5 at a double-ring ceremony at the Mary Immaculate Church of the Lourdes in Newton Upper Falls by Rev. Michael Doocey. The bride was given in marriage by her brother John B. Dorsey.

The bride, daughter of Mrs. Marcia J. Coffin, of Newton, is a graduate of Newton South High School and Burdett School of Boston. She is presently employed by the March of Dimes as a fund raiser.

The bridegroom, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Mayo, of Osterville, is a graduate of Cape Cod Regional Tech and attended Wentworth Institute. He is presently employed by Merchant Tire Co. as a mechanic.

The bride was attended by her sister, Kerry K. Coffin, as maid of honor. Her cousin, Renee Goff and friend Phyllis Donlon attended as bridesmaids. Attending as flower girl was Rebecca Mayo, niece of the bride and bridegroom.

The bridegroom was attended by his brother Steven A. Mayo as best man. The bridegroom's brother Mathew Mayo, and friends Bruce Holland and Mark Graceffa attended as ushers. Attending as ring bearer was Justin MacWilliams, nephew of the bride and bridegroom.

The couple took a honeymoon cruise to Nassau and Salt Cay, then visited Disney World and Key West, Fl. They now reside in Billerica.

North girls run win streak to six

Those Newton North girl hoopsters have kept the pressure on in six games so far this season, and with a 6-0 record to show, the Tigers must be doing something right.

North's latest victim, defending Suburban League champion Brookline, fell to the mighty Tiger press on Friday, 48-38, in a game in which the Newton offense played the supporting role.

Newton North hit only four of 20 shots from the free throw line and, according to Coach Irene Cucina, seemed tentative coming out of the gates.

"My girls were really nervous," the first-year coach said. "These kids have never beaten Brookline before. They don't know what it's like to beat them (Brookline)."

North's offense was spurty at best. Only four players scored, with Carol Ventura leading the way with 22 points.

"They (Brookline) shut us down early, but the press helped us get the lead back," Cucina said.

North held the slight edge, 32-30, after three quarters before capitalizing on a few steals to take the lead.

Wendy Rogers scored 12 points for Newton while Ann Meng chipped in with 10. Robin Silver was the only other Tiger scorer.

South tripped

A fourth-quarter gamble backfired, and early foul trouble came back to haunt them as the Newton South Lions dropped a 48-40 decision to host Boston Latin.

The Lions made the mistake of forcing Latin freshman Avril Roberts to take her team's shots, and the ninth-grader responded with 12 of her 23 points in the fourth quarter to ring the final bell.

South trailed after three, 22-19, and fell behind midway through the fourth period, 41-31, before senior forward Katrina Antonellis dropped home two hoops and a free throw to pull Newton back.

"The game was there," said South Coach Mark Aronson. "We could have won it, we just didn't do what we had to do."

Antonellis had kept South on the mark early, scoring seven first-quarter points to boost the Lions to a 13-7 advantage. Antonellis then picked up two fouls and was forced to rest for the remainder of the half.

Sophomore guard "Pookie" Wilson took charge for South, scoring 10 points on five-for-six shooting from the floor. Aronson cited the defensive work of Sheilla Coleman.

Lancers dropped

A slow start defensively hurt Newton Catholic in the end as the Lancers dropped a 45-26 game to visiting North Cambridge Catholic.

A "horrible" first half saw Newton Catholic fall behind 16-6 after one, and 26-10 at intermission, the result of poor defense up front.

"Our major problem is that we're not getting the help on defense from our forwards and center," Newton Catholic Coach Susan Calabro said. "We're not being aggressive and it's killing us."

Guards Silvanna Visco, Michelle Cedrone, and Cheryl Chagnon carried much of the defensive weight, and the combo performed admirably, according to the coach.

Cedrone led the Lancers in scoring with eight points, and Chagnon chipped in with seven.

7 North girls gain berths on soccer all-star squad

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

An undefeated regular season brought further rewards for the Newton North girls' soccer team recently when seven Tigers were named to the Suburban League All-Star team in a vote of the coaches. Only Brockton, with five selections, approached North's total. No other club had more than three on the 27-member squad.

Waltham had two players named to the team.

Leading the way for the Tigers were wing Carolyn Natale, stopper Carol Ventura and fullback Becca Locke. Joining them were Kristen Hughes, Laura Yellen, Marian Mann and Lisa Kazarosian.

Pam Vaughan and Kirsten Rossner made the club from Waltham.

Brockton was led by outstanding halfback Janet Boudreau. In addition, Karen Mency, Pamela Studder, Lynn Tartaglia and Noelle Lehrer were chosen.

Peabody and North Quincy each had three picks, while Brookline, Cambridge Rindge and Latin and Quincy joined Waltham with two. Medford had only one player chosen.

The area stars:

Carolyn Natale — Though she played a bunch of positions and "sacrificed the most for the team," according to Coach Fuzzy Howland, she still managed to lead the league in scoring with 11 goals and 18 assists for 29 points.

The three-year starter is a "dedicated team player," said Howland, who boasts "durability and an excellent knowledge of the game."

She played for the state Select Team during the summer, and was a second-team Eastern Mass. pick.

Currently starting for the Tiger basketball squad, Natale is a "promising college prospect" in soccer, according to Howland.

Carol Ventura — Another Tiger willing to sacrifice herself for the good of the team, Ventura took over the goaltending duties during the tournament when Laura Yellen went out with an injury. She played well enough in a new position to get North into the South Sectional finals against Needham.

All-Star honors are nothing new for Ventura. The senior is an All-Scholastic, first team Eastern Mass. Coaches and first team State Coaches.

The stopper always wound up taking the opposition's top scorer, and usually wound up winning the battle. She also found time to do a little scoring herself, notching seven goals and five assists.

"She has excellent soccer ability," said Howland.

Ventura starts alongside Natale for the basketball squad, and is a sure bet to be playing college soccer next fall.

Becca Locke — This wing fullback has all the tools a great soccer player needs: size, speed and durability. She was regularly assigned to take the best wing on the other team, and helped the Tigers to become one of the best defensive squads in Eastern Mass. She has "excellent college potential," according to Howland.

The coach also cited her "great leadership and ability to do anything I asked."

Kristen Hughes — Though she had to wear a brace all season after hurting her knee in spring soccer, this wing forward turned out to be one of North's most dependable scorers. She was particularly adept as a playmaker, adding 14 assists to her six goals.

Hughes boasts a very strong cross, and knows the game extremely well, according to Howland.

Laura Yellen — Aided by the nearly impenatrable defense in front of her, Yellen amassed some amazing numbers this season. She notched 14 shutouts, and in two years had exactly two goals scored against her in 34 games.

The only thing that has plagued this season has been injuries. Last year she hurt her knee, and this season she injured her shoulder in practice the day before the tournament, forcing her to miss the entire postseason.

Marion Mann — This halfback had "the toughest job of all, according to Howland. She played with two freshmen on the second midfield line, and provided tremendous leadership in helping them break in on the varsity level. The coach indicated that Mann could have played on the first line, but he preferred to have her key the second group.

Lisa Kazarosian — This stopper filled in everywhere on defense for the Tigers. She often sparked the team off the bench, as Howland used her to turn the tide and stop the other club's momentum. An excellent shotputter, Kazarosian managed to score three goals and add two assists despite spending most of her time on defense.

Pam Vaughan — The "quarterback" of the Waltham High team, according to Coach John Kelley, this senior captain led the squad with 19 goals. But scoring was not her only talent.

"We looked to her for a lot of things," said Kelley. "She's a real finesse player with good skills."

The center-forward is captaining the basketball squad this winter and plays softball in the spring. Kelley rates her as a sure-fire college soccer prospect. Pam's sister Kellie is playing at Brandeis, but the younger Vaughan hasn't settled on a college yet.

Kirsten Rossner — Another tricaptain, Rossner's big asset was her "ability to use the field to her advantage," according to Kelley. The wing fullback supported extremely well, and did her job in a "quiet, but dependable" way, said the coach.

Another basketball player, Rossner is another college prospect, said Kelley. Colby, Bowdoin and the University of Vermont are among her college considerations.

The elite team:

Newton North: Carolyn Natale, Carol Ventura, Becca Locke, Kristen Hughes, Laura Yellen, Marion Mann, Lisa Kazarosian.
Waltham: Pam Vaughan, Kirsten Rossner.
Brockton: Janet Boudreau, Karen Mency, Pamela Studder, Lynn Tartaglia, Noelle Lehrer.
Peabody: Kim Leonowitz, Susan Burns, Julie Goodwin.
North Quincy: Jan Hughes, Karrie Pistorino, Nancy Flukes.
Brookline: Sally Lincoln, Karen Nichols.
Cambridge Rindge and Latin: Erin McAuliffe, Justine Rhoden.
Quincy: Mary Thornton, Jennifer Golden.
Medford: Cindy Loungo.

South hoopsters peak against Latin

Newton South raced out to a 41-22 lead by halftime to cruise to a 63-48 decision over visiting Boston Latin in a Dual County League hoop contest Friday night. Lion coach Joe Killilea called it "by far our best effort of the year."

The defense sparked that tremendous first-half surge. The Lions stole the ball 13 times in the game, with Reggie Stewart and Pillan Thirumalaisamy accounting for nine of those.

Thirumalaisamy fired in eight of his 12 points in the first period as the Lions jumped out to a six-point bulge.

Backcourt partner Randy Collins took over the scoring duties in the second frame with nine of his 11, as the Lions really put the clamps on the Wolfpack.

Rowen Henry led the Lions on the glass with 10 rebounds. Sophomore Gary Grossman had 12 points by halftime, and finished with six caroms.

South also got a good effort from backup point guard T.J. Rhone, who had five assists and four points in addition to playing strong defense.

Joe King led Latin with 14 points.

Turnovers costly for Tiger five

Newton North simply turned the ball over too many times on Friday, and host Brookline wound up with a 58-40 Suburban League victory.

It was a four-point game with two minutes to go, but the Tigers hurt themselves with a turnover at the wrong moment, as they had all evening. The Indians capitalized and went on a run, as North coughed the ball up several more times.

After that, Brookline made sure it held onto the lead by cashing in at the stripe when Newton had to resort to fouling. In the game, the Indians were 20-for-27 at the line.

Darryl Snowden and Half Kenney led the way for the home club in that final frame. Each scored eight points, on their way to 16 in the game.

The Tigers were down by eight at the half, but made a strong comeback in the third period. Andy Lockwood sparked the surge with nine of his game-high 22 points.

Unfortunately, the senior forward didn't have much help in the scoring department. As a team, the Tigers were 13-of-40 from the floor.

"We were doing some really good things," said Coach Jerry Phillips, "but we couldn't put the ball in the hoop...We did a super job defensively."

The summary:

BROOKLINE(58)-Kenney 5-6-16, Elysee 3-1-7, Hummel 3-4-10, Snowden 4-8-16, Lipsky 4-1-9. Tot. 19-20-58.

Newton South girl tracksters in stride

WAYLAND — Newton South scored 17 of its 22 team members in picking up two wins Saturday in a girls' indoor track. The Lions scored 65 points to outdistance Wayland (53½) and Bedford (31½).

"We've got a lot of people so we're able to score two or three kids in each event," said South Coach Chris Omeltchenko. "The times are not great but I'm pleased that we're competitive. Right now we're able to win meets without great times."

Winning meets is relatively new to Omeltchenko and his lady tracksters. South did not win a meet two years ago and only won one last year.

This season, the Lions have won three in a row and seem to be on the road to recovery. And all this with a very young team.

"We've got only one senior on the team," the coach said, "but we're able to spread out the load. We've got more depth."

South got one of its better performances from one of its youngsters. Sophomore Nada Armian finished first in the 300 (41.4) and improved by four inches in the high jump, gaining her second place in that event with a 4-8 leap.

Freshman Eleanor Simon, Stephanie's sister, finished fifth in the 1,000.

Omeltchenko said he also got the usual strong performances from his veteran staffers of Julie Goldenberg, Lisa Heck, and Dede Theodore. Goldenberg won the 40-yard dash (5.5), Heck finished third in the 40, and Theodore won the shot put (29-10).

Dede's sister, Elaine Theodore, improved her shot put throw by two feet to capture third place.

South's Monique Brinson scored twice, finishing second in the hurdles and fifth in the high jump.

The Lions, 3-1, will meet Lincoln-Sudbury and Bishop Fenwick on Saturday.

Proia paces 3-1 victory

EVERETT — Doug Proia scored twice and Chuck Goldman stopped 27 shots as Newton North dumped Everett, 3-1, in a non-league hockey fray on Saturday.

Proia snapped a 1-1 tie with 11 seconds to play in the second period on his own rebound. Tim Weaver won the faceoff and got the puck back to Dave Robinson at the point. His blast was stopped, as was Proia's first attempt, but his next shot finally went in.

The score stayed that way until, remarkably, there were exactly 11 seconds left in the third period. With the Everett goalie out, Proia dumped a shot into the empty net from just inside the blue line. Tom Tocci and Rick DeSimone picked up assists.

The summary:

Newton Squirts 11-0 in 1st half

Newton Squirt A Black Team has completed its first 11 games of Middlesex League play without a loss to hold down first place. In its last three games, the Newton six defeated Framingham, 3-2; Lexington-Bedford, 6-3; and Natick, 9-1.

Mike Slyvia leads the scorers with 10 points on four goals and six assists. Billy Kerrissey has seven goals and two assists. Steven Delaney has been strong at left wing with two goals and five assists.

Jason Newberg, who scored the game-winner against Framingham with six minutes left in the third period, has tallied six points on two goals and four assists. Jason Minaker has four points, Tony Rosenfeld one goal and defenseman Mark Leone has three assists.

Also contributing to the winning effort have been Mark Moore and Jesse Locke. Newton's blueliners have been keeping the opposition at bay, including Leone, Chris DeMaio, Mike Cucinotta and Ritchie Taylor. Golatender Doug McGowan has posted a 2.0 goals against average for the first half of the season.

The Newton Squirts A Orange Team posted an impressive 6-1 victory over Burlington recently with Josh Sullivan and Keith Gessen notching a pair of goals each.

Single goals were scored by Michael Collins and Ryan Fitzpatrick. Collins collected three assists while Michael Greenbaum and Kenny Walsh had one apiece.

Burlingame to lead mature Lions

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

The way Newton South football coach Art Kojoyian tells the story, his Lions entered the 1985 grid season as boys but exited the field on Thanksgiving Day as men.

In three months time, Kojoyian took a primarily oddball bunch of sophomores that had never played varsity football and transformed them into a 6-4 varsity team.

Those still growing, awkward "babies" as the coach refered to them early on in the season are now varsity-type football players in their coach's mind.

"I'm pleased with the season," Kojoyian said. "Everything we worked for we earned. The four games that we did lose were to very good ball clubs, and six out of 10 is just a credit to our kids. I don't think much was expected of us."

Even Kojoyian had his doubts. The long-time coach had but four starters returning come August, and only three when the season started. The coach had implemented a brand new offense, the complicated triple option, and selected a sophomore quarterback to run it. And last but not least, Kojoyian lacked maturity and size in his underaged troops.

"We had a junior varsity team playing a varsity game," Kojoyian remembered. "And we made mistakes. But, we learned."

Learning the new offense was the first major task at hand. Kojoyian said he made the switch from the iron power-I to the option because "the well had gone dry," and because the time was right considering he had most of his current players coming back for another two years.

"I felt it was the opportune time to put in the offense we were going to put in," he said. "With the material and the lack of size we had coming up, this offense was more suitable. And you have to adapt to to your materials."

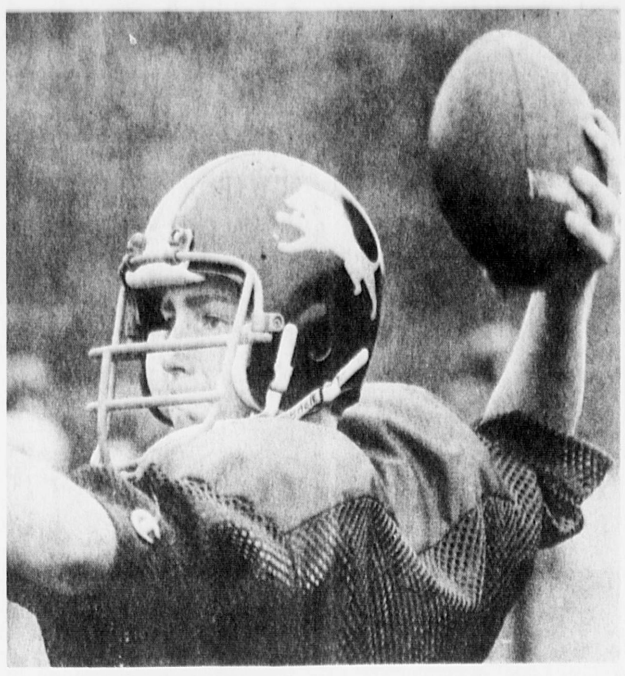
Much to the coach's satisfaction, "somehow we were able to get it in and the kids picked it up."

A quick start featured three straight wins against non-league opponents before the Lions dropped the next two to Dual County League foes. From there, South won three more in a row before losing the final two games.

Some of the team's success can be credited to sophomore and rookie QB Ben Burlingame, who at times ran the show like a 12-year veteran.

"For a sophomore to take hold of a position as critical as quarterback and to do what he did with no varsity experience....he did a heck of a job," Kojoyian said of Burlingame. "There's a lot to improve on, but for the first year he did a great job."

The thought of having Burlingame back for two more seasons has got to thrill the Lion coach. With just 10 games under his belt, Burlingame has already got the option offense etched in his mind. With time, and a few familiar faces to hand off to, he can only get better.



Quarterback Ben Burlingame

"The kids will come back with much improvement," Kojoyian said. "But you have to work again. Winning six ball games this year doesn't win us one next year."

Sophomore Leroy Browne played second fiddle to the senior running back combo of David Mosby and Kevin Rollins, but next year should be different.

Browne leads the returning pack in experience and should have the upper hand next fall. This past year, he rushed for 274 yards with four touchdowns on 69 carries.

"For a first season he did very well," Kojoyian said of Browne. "He showed improvement in every game."

Against Bedford in a late-October victory, Browne rushed for 73 yards, including a 35-yard touchdown sprint.

Rama Malone and T.J. Rhone saw limited action this fall but both show promise, according to the coach.

For a 125-pounder, Malone handles himself well, said Kojoyian. Rhone, a 160-pounder, didn't see a lot of action on offense (six carries for 20 yards) but definetly fits into South's plans.

"He's bigger than the other two (Browne and Malone) and he's quite fast - the fastest we've got," said Kojoyian of Rhone. "He's got potential."

Junior Dominic Costa will pivot the offensive line next year, and Kojoyian calls him "a hell of a center." The 165-pounder will captain next season's group along with end Jeff Brewington and guard John Hillis.

Hillis will return at right guard, while Rob Hillis will man the left guard spot.

Brewington and Chris Tyler will be back to cover the end positions, leaving only the tackle spots to be filled.

"We have the bodies to put there," Kojoyian said of the tackle jobs left open by Jon Linder and Seth Oliver.

On defense, Kojoyian said he might realign the entire crew.

With the graduation of Rollins and Mosby at linebacker, Kojoyian said the Lions will be weak behind the line.

"The defense we've used has worked well, but I think we might change to suit the type of kids we have coming back," Kojoyian said. "We can make the adjustments."

Sophomore Rob Hillis did start all this season as a linebacker, but he is the only returner with any substantial amount of varsity playing time.

Kojoyian said Brewington could be moved to linebacker and Malone is a combination linebacker-safety and could also earn a full-time job.

The defensive line is pretty much set with ends Keith Marion and John Hillis, noseguard Bruce Lindsay, and tackle George Zapp returning. The only hole that needs to be filled is that left by tackle Oliver.

In the defensive secondary, John Morgan will spearhead the crew and can play either safety or corner. With four interceptions this past fall, Kojoyian called Morgan "one of our better defensive kids."

Cornerbacks Scott Perrin and Sean Brady played well and, according to Kojoyian, really came into their own during the final stretch of the season.

The coach also has safety Rhone back there and said that Browne could also play.

Lions lose gymnastics opener

NEWTON — Senior Whitney Dorf picked up three firsts, a second, and a third Monday in a losing effort as Newton South fell to Methuen, 82.9-80.8 in the season-opening gymnastics meet.

Dorf captured firsts on the vault (8.3), the high bar (5.0), and the parallel bars (4.8). The co-captain began the meet with a second-place showing in the floor excersise (5.2), and ended the competition with a third on the rings (4.0).

Newton South Coach Tom Steeves said the Lions were trailing by three points entering the rings, and although his team won the coach said it was not quit enough to pull out a victory overall.

"We were supposed to be strong on the rings," Steeves said, "but we kind of fell apart."

Dorf tied with teammate and senior co-captain Dave Albert for third on the rings while junior Dave Kalis finished second with a 4.2 score. Revere took first place in that event.

Ice storm generates hot debate

By Les Orsini, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Aldermen and public works officials traded accusations and insults for two hours Monday night in a heated effort to discover what went wrong with the cleanup of icy streets on Jan. 5.

The questions eventually centered on the Department of Public Works (DPW) new deputy commissioner, Tony Scalese, and his midmorning decision not to call out the entire DPW cleanup force. But the debate, which continued past 1 a.m., produced no answers.

The aldermanic Public Facilities Committee called in Scalese and DPW Commissioner James L. Hickey Monday night to discuss the department's handling of the icy Jan. 5 storm, about which some aldermen had complained bitterly.

> 'You keep beating on them until they do the job right.'
> Ald. Richard McGrath

Committee members learned that the four sanders assigned to handle the early morning cleanup were not in operation at 8:20 a.m. when Scalese came to the DPW's Elliot Street control center.

Two remained in the DPW yard, one was answering a police call and a fourth was stuck on the road out of gas, the DPW officials said.

"I can't believe in the City of Newton that you guys let a truck run out of gas," said Alderman Ronald Marini.

Marini and other aldermen charged the DPW should have its full complement of more than 20 vehicles on the road. "We should have had a full-scale operation and we had nothing," Marini said.

Scalese said he had assigned four vehicles and six DPW employees to be ready at 4 a.m. in case a snow or ice emergency arose. But Hickey said the deputy commissioner was having difficulty communicating his orders to control-center employees and it took a number of calls around midnight Saturday to straighten the matter out.

"There was something very strange about what was happening," Hickey said.

Murdock Fraser, control center head, told aldermen the storm began as slush around 6:30 a.m. The roads started freezing around 9:30 a.m. when the temperature abruptly plummeted from 33 to 29 degrees, Hickey said.

Shortly afterward Scalese doubled the number of trucks on the road, the deputy commissioner said. "The only fault I would think is not calling them all in then," Hickey said.

"It was not a major catastrophe," he said. "There were not a lot of accidents. It was a low accident day."

It wasn't until around 11:30 a.m. that Scalese called out the entire DPW force and employees did not respond quickly, Murdock said. He attributed the slow response of employees to the two National Football League playoff games on television that day.

Witness to 'Miracle in Miami'

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

They were more than 1,500 miles behind enemy lines, shovelling coal in the rain so that the New England Patriots could do their best impression of "The Little Train That Could."

Halfway through the fourth quarter, it was no longer a matter of "I think I can," but one of "I knew I could."

The Patriots had pulled off the "Miracle in Miami," and their local fans loved every minute of it.

"For a big shot, I didn't have that choice of a seat," State Rep. Joseph DeNucci said Monday from a pay phone at Logan International Airport. "I was up high at about the 10-yard line."

DeNucci's trip to Miami was not all warmth and light. As soon as he had arrived in the Sunshine State, the former middlewight contender learned that the man who had brought him up through the boxing ranks, Anthony "Rip" Valente of Medford, had passed away at 86.

Although his former manager's death weighed heavily on his mind, DeNucci savored the Pats overwhelming defeat of the Miami Dolphins along with nearly 15,000 other New Englanders who ventured south for the game.

> 'It was like New Year's Eve.'
> Joe DeNucci

"You had to be there. The spirit of Boston, in particular, and New England, as a whole, was there. We were all sort of brothers and sisters down there. There was a very warm community spirit," he said.

When the victory was secure and the Super Bowl light shone brightly at the end of Patriots' tunnel, their fans celebrated in style.

Pickets mar mayoral ball

By Edward Cafasso, Staff Writer

AUBURNDALE — More than 250 of the city's public safety employees picketed the entrance to the Newton Marriott Saturday night, bringing their dissatisfaction with contract negotiations home to hundreds of guests attending an inaugural ball in honor of Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

The massive demonstration by police officers and firefighters lasted two-and-a-half hours, creating a traffic logjam that extended for a half mile along Commonwealth Avenue.

The fires of discontent were fueled by the Newton Police Association's (NPA) landslide rejection of the city's wage offer on Friday.

The third ratification effort with the NPA in less than a year yielded 145 votes against a two-year pact featuring annual raises of 5 percent and only 31 ballots in favor. Eighteen union members did not vote.

The picketers began gathering in the biting cold outside the Marriott at 6 p.m. and did not disperse until nearly all the guests had arrived.

The only incident involved Officer Thomas Fleming, an outspoken NPA member and an 18-year veteran of the force. Fleming was treated and released from Newton-Wellesley Hospital for a leg injury sustained when he was struck by a passing motor vehicle.

It was the first public demonstration by disgruntled police officers since December 1983, when about 50 NPA members staged a picket line outside City Hall.

This weekend's protest featured the inclusion of firefighters and even some public works employees, who believe they should receive the 7-percent pay raises granted to teachers and custodians.

The protestors distributed leaflets to the drivers of incoming cars and carried signs with slogans like "Squish the Fish, Can the Mann," "1st Rate Police & Fire; Second Rate Pay," "Public Safety First; Library Second," and "Elephants Aren't the Only Ones Who Work for Peanuts; Police Do Too."

A joint press release issued by the NPA and the Newton Firefighters Association (NFA) said the city "can well afford to pay its police and firefighters what they have earned and deserve. All that is required is the willingness to do so."

The city unilaterally implemented a disputed contract with the NPA after negotitaions

Cop found guilty of assault and battery

By Les Orsini, Staff Writer

NEWTON — A Newton police officer is appealing his conviction on an assault and battery charge that has a maximum penalty of 2 1/2 years in jail.

Officer Brian Henderson was found guilty earlier this week of assaulting Waltham resident Michael Colarusso with a dangerous weapon — a night stick — at around 11:30 p.m. Sept. 28.

At a Jan. 22 pre-trial conference, a date will be set for appealing his conviction by Judge John Murphy in Newton District Court, according to Assistant District Attorney Paul Kelley.

Attorney Edward P. Reardon of Worcester represented Henderson at the trial. He declined to comment on the case except to say Henderson will appeal Murphy's ruling.

Newton Police Chief William Quinn was unavailable for comment. Mayor Theodore D. Mann, at his weekly press conference, said the matter was undergoing an internal Police Department investigation.

During the two-hour trial, witnesses said Henderson grabbed Colarusso by the collar, spun him around and hit him on the head with a night stick, according to Kelley. The Waltham man was later taken to Newton-

Legacy of war marks life in 'the Holy City'

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

JERUSALEM — It is a cool night in this, the Holy City. Except for the baying of hounds and the cackling of roosters, the eerie predawn stillness is broken only by the sound of a soldier's boots plodding along the 2,000-year-old cobblestones lining the streets.

But for television antennae sprouting like tree limbs from the ancient stone buildings, not much has changed in this walled city. It is, in many respects, the same place that Judah Maccabee captured from the Syrians, where Jesus bore the cross down the Via Dolorosa and Mohammed ascended to the heavens.

Technically, it is a time of peace in Jerusalem. Having been captured fully from Jordan by the Israeli army in 1967, the many guns in the city are mainly silent. In reality, though, the peace is a tense one.

The cobblestones of Jerusalem have been tainted through the years with blood; blood that has flowed just as freely as the milk and the honey did in another era.

On this day, the blood is still flowing, the result of a fight between an Arab boy and a Jewish boy. They may not know much about why they hate each other, but that is not important. The fact that they do is enough. Because, living in a city where tensions rise and fall like the water of the Dead Sea, hatred is handed down from one generation to another like a ragged scarf.

From Jello to goat cheese ...

Tastes change with times

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

NEWTON — Several decades ago, millions of children would return home from school to find their apron-clad mothers busy in the kitchen preparing the evening meal. Dinners were usually a family affair served at the same time each day and consisting of such foods as meatloaf or tuna casseroles, mashed potatoes and cooked frozen spinach.

But times have changed.

Now, moms are cooking less, families are eating out more and — with the increased availability of fresh vegetables, salad bars and prepared hot foods in grocery stores — meals at home tend to be healthier and easier to prepare.

According to Newton resident Peggy Glass, who writes for "Bon Appetit" and teaches cooking out of her Auburndale home, people are no longer interested in the basics of learning to cook. Instead, she says, they want to learn to cook for a party, "not an everyday casserole for kids."

Indeed, as the gravies of the 1950s have given way to the sauces of the 1980s and "vegematics" have been replaced by cuisinarts, people have become "much more sophisticated," she says.

Glass will lecture on these food and cooking trends, and their socio-economic connections, on Jan. 23 at 10:30 a.m. at the Auburndale branch of the Newton Free Library, 375 Auburn St.

She is requesting that participants bring a dish from their favorite food era to the lecture. For example, the Auburndale branch librarian will offer pudding — "That's the comfort food she remembers," says Glass.

Typical examples of foods from other past decades, according to Glass, include Jello mold from the 1950s, vats of granola from the 1960s, quiche from the 1970s and goat cheese and sun-dried tomatoes from the 1980s.

Recalling the days when her mother donned an apron in the kitchen, Glass says, "Lunch was always on time, dinner was eaten together," and "comfort foods," such as dairy products and mashed potatoes, were served often.

But the women's movement and the growing number of two-income families have changed all that, she says. "Cooking is not as

"There was a lot of partying. It was like New Year's Eve," said DeNucci, who claims to have known long ago that the Pats were bound for New Orleans.

"I thought after the Cincinatti game that the Patriots were destined to go to the Super Bowl. They had the highest morale. They were not going to be denied and nobody was going to take it away from them," he said.

"I think they're destined. As far as I'm concerned, regardless of the outcome of the Chicago game, to me the Super Bowl was Sunday. They're the champions. Leftovers always taste better cold," DeNucci added.

Newton School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile attended his first game ever in the Orange Bowl and watched history unfold from a seat about "one row below the Goodyear Blimp."

"There were a lot of Patriots fans there. I think even some of the Miami fans were surprised at how many people were there from the Boston area. You got the feeling that Miami sensed this time might be a little different," he said.

Although most of the banter between Miami and New England fans was good-natured, Gentile said he would have "felt more secure" if he had had a seat closer to DeNucci.

The Dolphins backs were finally broken when Patriot lineman Lester Williams stripped the ball from Dolphin running back Joe Carter and veteran Julius Adams pounced on the pigskin.

"That was probably the most important single play of the game," Gentile said. "The crowd was really starting to get into the game and the momentum had shifted in Miami's favor, but that ended it."

His most memorable sight was the Orange Bowl at 7 p.m. when the Patriots fans poured out two decades of frustration.

"By that time, the Orange Bowl had actually been taken over by Patriots fans. Just about all the Miami fans had gone home and all you could see was a sea of red. We really made our presence felt."We didn't do much out-and-out celebrating afterwards. We had enjoyed ourselves so much over the weekend that, by the time the game ended, it was nap time," Gentile added.

Building Dept. revamp due

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON - The Building Department needs a comprehensive reorganization and should employ computers to increase efficiency, a Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA) study concludes.

The study, released last week by Mayor Theodore D. Mann, states the department is performing well, but is handicapped by an "antiquated organizational structure and management system."

"Clearly, the department is working with integrity, honesty and professionalism," the study says. But it adds: outdated methods force "the department to work harder than is necessary to produce the results currently experienced."

After presenting the study to reporters at his weekly press conference, Mann said, "The report reaffirms our confidence in the integrity, honesty and professionalism of the Building Department."

Building Commissioner James Cameron echoed Mann's conclusion.

"As far as I'm concerned, the city of Newton has the best building department inspection division in the commonwealth," he said.

Cameron agreed with the report's assessment that the department's system of operation is antiquated because of changes in Newton over the past four decades.

Where once the Garden City's large homes were almost exclusively occupied by single families, trends toward smaller families and economic pressures have led to more multi-family units.

The city's construction boom has also contributed to the department's problems. In the first eight months of 1985, the city experienced more than $73 million of new construction, almost $10 million more than in all of 1983.

"Now it's time to deal with these issues," said Cameron, who has been building commissioner since 1982.

The 63-page report offers three major recommendations to improve department operations.

- The existing department should be split into two separate departments - one for inspections and the other for maintenance and design of public buildings.
- Within the inspection department, a zoning code enforcement division should be created to enforce the city's zoning ordinances.
- A computerized management system should be installed.

Completed last month, the $16,500 study was sparked last spring in part by the discovery that school buildings had not been inspected for over 1 1/2 years. State law requires annual inspections before the academic year begins in September.

The department also came under fire because of difficulties with the state's Civil Service system that left two building inspector posts unfilled for almost two years, along with building permit and inspection irregularities.

The combined effect of those problems prompted the Board of Aldermen in May to demand the hiring of at least one more building inspector. Aldermen threatened not to approve the department's budget otherwise.

Mann proposed the study as a compromise, arguing any problems within the department would have to be identified clearly before steps were taken to solve them.

In part, the study backs up solutions proposed by some aldermen, who last spring suggested splitting the department into two divisions and hiring more employees.

The report says the city would have to create two new positions — a zoning code officer and a "temporary office managerial employee" — to implement the recommendations.

The new commissioner for the proposed Inspectional Services Department could be filled by reclassifying the presently vacant post of assistant Building Department commissioner, the report suggests.

Because of past difficulties in filling job vacancies, the study urges the city to "explore the feasibility" of removing "selected positions" from state Civil Service. Newton could also create a citywide civil service system so vacancies can be filled quickly, the report says.

But Chief Administrative Officer Richard Kelliher said it is unlikely the city would engage in a wholesale departure from the state's Civil Service Department in the near future. "It's an ambitious recommendation," Kelliher said. "It would be a long-term situation."

Mann said he would push for adoption of the study's three major recommendations. Aldermen would have to approve the reorganization and any funds needed for the task. The mayor said he hopes aldermen will back the effort in April, when the administration's plans for the next year's budget are submitted to the board.

Mann gave a first look at the proposed reorganization when he announced his intention to appoint Cameron the first commissioner of the new department for public facilities. Under the reorganization, Cameron would no longer have responsibility for zoning, which will fall under the umbrella of the new commissioner of the Inspectional Services Department.

Cameron's more than 30 years experience as a city employee have enabled him to learn more about Newton's public facilities "than anyone in the city," Mann said. "Jim's a resource."

To compile the report, representatives of the MMA's Field Services Division examined each branch of the Building Department, as well as its role and services. During the four months of work, the MMA studied the department's maintenance duties, manpower needs, and operational practices.

Pines starts stumping for senate

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Though she has not held elective office since 1978, Lois Pines demonstrated Sunday night she has not lost touch with the issues.

Sunday night's event, which attracted 85 Brookline and Newton residents, was designed to drum up support for Pines' run to replace retiring state Sen. Jack Backman, D-Newton-Brookline. The official announcement of her candidacy is about a month away, but she made it clear she intends to be in the running.

"One of the reasons I'm here is a good friend of ours — Jack Backman — decided not to run for re-election," Pines said, speaking from the hallway stairs of Patricia and Sandy Gadsby's home. "As a state senator from the Newton-Brookline district, I would be glad to continue his tradition."

Pines said she will base her candidacy on issues affecting the environment, education, children, women and the elderly.

"I started in politics on the environmental issues," said Pines, Newton's state representative from 1972 to 1978, to the press before her speech.

Among her environmental credits, she lists authorship of the state's bottle bill, fighting to stamp out the open burning of refuse and working to win for the commonwealth the right to sue those who pollute the environment with toxic chemicals.

"Yet 15 years later, we still have significant issues with the toxics," she said.

Education "needs more advocates at the state level," she said. Of particular concern to her will be preschool education and day care, Pines said.

"We have to provide more quality day care for children," she said. "We need to provide that care for 2½, 3½, and 4-year olds, not just beginning at kindergarten."

"My husband and I dealt with the issue of how are we going to care for our kids if we both work," said Pines, whose son, Robert, is a Harvard senior and whose daughter, Davida, is a Yale freshman. Her husband, Joseph Pines, is a doctor. In addition to her work in government, Lois Pines, 45, is a tax attorney.

A sponsor of the Equal Rights Amendment, Pines said she would continue the struggle for women's equality as a state senator. She was the sole woman on the Newton Board of Aldermen in 1971 and one of eight women in the state House of Representatives in 1972, she said.

"I'm not used to thinking of myself as a female candidate, but as a candidate who cares about issues which affect women and children," she said. "I've always supported issues women care about. Yes, I'm a feminist."

Describing herself as a "progressive" rather than a liberal, she said as senator she would advocate for human services to the needy, just as she did in her years as a state legislator.

Pines left the State House in 1978 to run for Secretary of State. She lost by a few thousand votes in the primary to Michael Connolly, current Secretary of State, in what was "the closest election in the history of Massachusetts," she said. She also failed in a bid to be lieutenant governor in 1982.

Iodice suit threatens housing ordinance

NEWTON — It will be at least two to three months before the state's high court renders a decision on the validity of the city's 10 percent ordinance, according to Assistant City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce.

At issue is Michael F. Iodice's challenge to the 10 percent ordinance, which requires developers who receive a special permit for a high-density housing project to set aside a percentage of the units for low income use.

Iodice, who has built several large-scale commercial and residential projects in the Garden City, contends the law violates his rights because it forces him to turn over property to the city without permission or compensation.

The case has drawn the attention of officials from across the state, who believe the city's law is the only way to provide badly-needed housing in the face of federal subsidy cutbacks and skyrocketing real estate prices.

"Our side is very simple. The 10 percent ordinance is an incentive zoning program. If you seek additional density, more than you would be allowed as a matter of right, then you have to give the city a small percentage of the units. The ordinance basically allows you to get more housing than you had a right to get," he said.

"It comes down to a benefit for a bargain," Peirce added.

Peirce said Iodice agreed to provide eight low-income units to the Newton Housing Authority if he was allowed to go ahead with a 76 unit project on Commonwealth Avenue in Auburndale.

He said Iodice did not contest the ordinance's validity until he discovered he would be paid the federally subsidized rate for the units, rather than market rate prices.

The developer now wants the SJC to overturn the ordinance so that he can get the eight units back, claiming he would have received $125,000 in additional income if he had been allowed to rent them at market rates.

Peirce said that if Iodice wins the case and the court issues a broadly-based decision, the ruling could set back other communities' efforts to adopt similar laws.

City workers show devotion to duty

NEWTON — City employees saved Newton North High School from extensive damage Christmas Eve when an act of apparent vandalism sent water spilling down three floors of the building.

Seven members of the Building Department's maintenance staff and a group of school custodians left their warm homes and families around 11:50 p.m. when they learned lavatory sinks had been stopped and faucets were left running.

The Fire Department was the first to respond when a smoke detector short-circuited as a result of the water, Asst. Supt. Vincent Silluzio said Thursday.

"This is a remarkable thing when a city worker or employee responds on Christmas (Eve)," said Building Commissioner James Cameron.

They had to remove waterlogged carpeting and damaged tiles, as well as clean up the water, Silluzio said. Custodians worked for several hours and their place was taken on Christmas morning by a dozen school custodians.

Though the water had been running for about two hours by the time firefighters arrived, the damage was not extensive, Silluzio said. To guard against future acts of vandalism, police will keep watch on the building from 11 p.m. Saturday until Monday morning — the only time when no custodians are present, Silluzio said.

Silluzio has written a letter to Cameron commending the seven maintenance men who responded Christmas Eve. They are Corbert, Vincent Antonellis, Joseph Bibbo, Guido Cantoldi, Charles Cerone, Thomas Hayes, Peter Scaltreto.

Custodians claim unfair labor practices

NEWTON — The union that represents local school custodians and cafeteria workers has filed an unfair labor practices charge against the School Committee.

Assistant Superintendent of Personnel Dr. Thomas P. O'Conor said the school administration has not been notified of the labor complaint.

The union filed the charges last week with the state Labor Relations Commission. According to commission files, the School Committee's lawyer was sent a copy of the charges, staff attorney Sherry Talmadge said.

"I don't know why Mr. O'Conor doesn't know about the charges," President of local #454 of Service Employees International Union Robert Robards said. "We filed our complaint with the Labor Relations Commission and the School Committee's lawyer was also sent a copy, and perhaps he has failed to notify the schools.

Robards claims last year's contract has not been signed by the schools, and previously negotiated sections of the contract have been rearranged by the schools to suit their schedule.

The custodians have not been notified of their pay increases or the number of sick days each employee is allowed, and they have been working holidays not negotiated in the contract, Robards said.

"The schools have made their own changes in the contract without sitting down with us," Robards said. "What they're saying to us is 'You live with it', and we just can't. We feel the law should be followed," Robards said.

The union is concerned about the unaddressed issues because they are about to enter negotiations for a new contract, Robards said.

Frank gets perfect score from ADA

WASHINGTON — Five senators and 20 House members, including local representative Barney Frank, received perfect scores from the Americans for Democratic Action for their liberal votes in 1985, but Congress as a whole had a poor showing on progressive issues, the group said today.

"The overall record is not good: The House of Representatives average is only 45 percent and that of the Senate is 40 percent," ADA director Ann Lewis said.

An analysis of the voting records in 1985 showed a growing rift between Democrats and Republicans. Ms. Lewis said.

"Despite talk of a growing political center, the gap between the two parties has been growing for the last 10 years," she said.

The ADA, a public interest lobbying group for liberal positions, rated members of Congress on 20 votes covering issues such as arms control, national economic policy, domestic social policy and human rights abroad.

In the House, perfect scores were turned in by Massachusetts Democrats Barney Frank, Ed Markey and Gerry Studds.

Indicted on charges of extortion

BOSTON — A Chestnut Hill resident who served on the state Finance Commission has been indicted by a federal grand jury.

The grand jury late last week returned 18 counts charging Joseph J. Berlandi, 46, of 65 Essex Rd. in Chestnut Hill and Bruce M. Glinski, 39, of Lynnfield, with mail fraud, conspiracy to commit extortion and extortion in connection with the development of a building located at 45 Milk St., Boston. The building at one time was owned by New England Rare Coin Galleries.

Both men were arraigned before Judge David Mazzone and both pleaded innocent to all charges. A tentative trial date of March 3 has been set.

U.S. Attorney William F. Weld and John D. Johnson, district director of the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), jointly announced that the indictment charges Berlandi, an attorney, and Glinski, formerly an independent salesman for New England Rare Coin Galleries, with scheming to obtain for Berlandi the position of development coordinator on the 45 Milk St. project.

Pursuant to a contract naming him development coordinator, Berlandi received approximately $583,870 from New England Rare Coin Galleries. The indictment charges Berlandi and Glinski with using the U.S. mails to defraud the coin galleries of the sums of $243,000 turned over to Glinski by Berlandi and of $50,000 paid to Glinski by the mechanical subcontractor on the project. The indictment also charges that Berlandi and Glinski conspired to commit extortion and did commit extortion in connection with the $50,000 payment for the mechanical subcontractor.

All the payments were allegedly made for purported "consulting" services on the Milk Street project. According to the indictment no such services were performed. Each of the 16 counts of mail fraud carries a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment and a $1,000 fine.

The conspiracy to commit extortion and the extortion count each carry a maximum penalty of 20 years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine. The case was investigated by agents of the IRS. It is being prosecuted by assistant U.S. attorneys Daniel Small and Alexandra Leake, members of the Public Corruption Unit in the U.S. Attorney's Office.

City needs zoning enforcement officer

NEWTON — The city needs a full-time "zoning enforcement officer" to monitor changing land-use patterns and establish closer ties with community leaders, according to recommendations contained in an independent management review of the Building Department.

"Creation of the position of zoning enforcement officer will provide the opportunity for the community to get a better view of the impact of a healthy economy on the use and modification of land and structures," the report said.

The push for the new post comes at a time when the city is facing a trio of related issues — an unprecedented development boom, a widespread drive for a moratorium on most types of commercial construction and converging efforts to completely revise zoning laws.

In addition, by late 1987, administration officials hope that the recommendations from the Village Study will result in a complete reformation of the city's current zoning system.

The enforcement post should be set up as a branch of a separate inspectional services department that would report directly to the commissioner of that department, the MMA report said.

The study found that the city's building inspectors currently "split their time between monitoring construction and enforcing compliance with the zoning ordinance."

Although Building Commissioner James W. Cameron has a statutory responsibility as "zoning code enforcement officer," the report said those "duties have been delegated to the building inspectors who handle all zoning complaints in their district."

Iodice suit threat to city's housing

Area housing officials, concerned with the continuous depletion of affordable housing stock in their cities and towns, are keeping a close eye on an ongoing court battle between developer Michael Iodice and the City of Newton. As well they might.

Newton, with an ordinance that requires any developer who wants to exceed the city's density limits to donate 10 percent of his housing units to low-income use in return for a special permit, has been a pioneer. Very few municipalities surrounding the Garden City have made a comparable commitment to insuring that low and middle-income people can live in the city.

It is another act of compassion and humanity for which the city's elected and appointed officials have become well known in the commonwealth. It is especially aimed at allowing Newton natives who, for one reason or another, have not mastered a hammerlock on the American dream a chance to remain in the city they have grown up to love.

The 10 percent ordinance is also aimed at allowing elderly persons, living on fixed incomes that are being diminished daily by economic forces beyond their control, to live independently near the ones they love.

The ordinance offers developers "a benefit for a bargain," according to Assistant City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce. We see little reason why developers should squawk when, given the utter lack of developable land in the city, reaping profits from projects is getting to be more and more problematic. The rules of the game are published. No one should be on the playing field who doesn't agree with them.

Let those with objections develop properties somewhere else, like Weston, Mr. Iodice's home town, where you need 2½ acres just to build a single-family home.

Relieved to hear Tennant will return

It was with great relief that we finally read that Alderman Bob Tennant is recovering from a serious stroke and determined to resume his role on the Newton Board of Aldermen.

Tennant, who was the second highest vote-getter among the aldermen in the November election, has served the city well during his two decades on the board. A consistent advocate for the business community, he has never hesitated to take a firm stand on issues affecting the business climate in the city.

Often, if Bob Tennant did not stand up for those doing business in the city, they would have had no voice at all.

We wish him all the best as he heads to Florida for more rehabilitation. He has overcome a lot of obstacles in the course of his life, and we are reassured to hear that he has set his sights on returning to the Board of Aldermen.

Mr. Speaker takees inventory

By Loring Swaim

Don't be misled by press reports of animosity between the two branches spoiling 1985's final hours in the legislature.

"It's institutional, not personal," Speaker Keverian asserts in his office one year to the day after he took over and six hours after an aide had laid on his desk a still-unopened fish lunch.

Preoccupation with peripheral feelings, however fascinating to the media, should not eclipse the significance of the year's "landmark legislative accomplishments," he suggests.

The yearend situation was actually exactly what you'd expect when a seasoned and wily President of the Senate, accustomed to unquestioned obeisance from his members, and a new Speaker of the House, bent on encouraging full involvement of all his members, watch time run out on their joint enterprise.

For decades, prorogation was the occasion for the "leadership" of both branches to honor their deals during the year with myriad members by gavelling through pet bills in the hectic wee small hours, it was a.k.a. the "feeding frenzy."

But this is now the era on Beacon Hill of rules reform. George Keverian wrested the Speakership from Tom McGee a year ago promising precisely long-overdue changes and a new House image; full member participation; and orderly, fair and open "process."

"Any Senate president," Keverian says delicately of this year's prorogation, "and any House speaker is somewhat competitive and protective of his respective branch's prerogatives and rights.

"Some feelings about the process and about dealing with the remaining issues did develop during the last few days. But it was institutional, not personal."

Before the Christmas break, Keverian had informed his troops that their final two legislative days would deal strictly with the six matters then in conference committee or those nearing final enactment. He wasn't keen about playing favorites or rewarding loyalty as was the custom.

'The Governor proposes; the legislature disposes. We've had a banner year.'

George H. Keverian

Realistically, he says, given the exasperating yearlong tactics of one individual house member questioning and delaying virtually everything, he figured there'd scarcely be time to dispose of key matters.

But some on the Senate side evidently thought Keverian was unilaterally and highhandedly dictating the Senate's agenda.

Frankly, in hindsight, it might have helped had Keverian gone the extra mile and notified Senate President Bulger privately what he had in mind. But at this state, that's not Keverian's style; he's managing the house, not the General Court.

As it turned out, several key issues – Ethics Commission amendments and presumptive sentencing, for two – fell just short of enactment. They are now expected, in a departure from practice, to be reinstated promptly in the House in this new session and pushed to completion.

Everyone had warned he couldn't possibly run the place without rancor and division following that bruising ousting of then Speaker McGee.

He always knew he'd find a way.

"The morale of the House," he says, albeit subjectively, "is at an alltime high. Everyone is talking to everybody. Almost without exception, all the so-called McGee people are with me, strongly with me, supportive whenever needed on a vote."

"We changed the rules in such a way that those who are serious about rules changes could accept them with integrity. Everyone participated in the process; everyone seems to be excited about this new atmosphere. It is friendly; it is open; it is productive; and it works.

"They say I have no agenda. The agenda should be what the members determine is the agenda. The Governor proposes; the legislature disposes. We've had a banner year."

One unsolved problem for 1986 is how to deal, trenchantly yet fairly, with that lone representative who, for reasons of his own, seems to enjoy defying the outrage of his colleagues and holding them hostage to whimsical parliamentary stalling.

"It's very difficult atmosphere in which to work," laments the speaker, "There's a high level of frustration in the House.

"It's a dilemma with no easy answers."

A salute to the real diehards

By Sarah Droney McGurrin

OK. OK. Squish the Fish. Maul the Mammal. Berry the Bears. Led by Mike Dukakis and Ray Flynn, just about the entire human race has leapt onto the victory wagon. Not even the Megabucks-laden State Lottery Commission has found itself as popular in the past week as the New England Patriots.

There's no quarrel with that. Hey, even I — a certifiable basketball junkie — am happy about their success. This team does indeed deserve every ounce of its glory.

But the people I'm most excited for, the folks I'm positively ecstatic for are the unqualified, demented, hardcore New England Patriot Fans. The Diehards with a capital D. We're not talking fair-weather here. We're talking about those fanatics who didn't just discover the Pats three weeks ago.

These guys built the bandwagon brick by brick and they've been riding it since the opening kickoff in 1960 against the Dallas Texans at Harvard Stadium.

These guys cheered through all the debacles, all the disasters that have come to be a special part of this special team. When the entire Eastern seaboard thumbed their noses at the Patsies for the 2-12 season in 1971 and the 2-14 record in 1981 the Diehards still watched, giving new meaning to the term masochism. Still followed them as faithfully as a lap dog through Madman Meyer, Colorado Chuck, et al.

They are consummate fans, complete and secure in their loyalty. Devotion is finally being rewarded for these guys and that makes this observor grin from ear to ear.

Following their glorious win over the Raiders, topped by last Sunday's squishing of the fish in Miami, nearly everyone in New England is walking around with a smile on their face. But you'll notice the Diehards walking down the street or around your office.

They're in heaven. You can pick them out at rallies or on the bus. They have that glazed look on their mugs.

Believe me. I know. Boy, do I know. I'm married to one and work with another. Both are positively nutty about the N.E. Patriots. Always have been. Always will be.

You don't need a sports page to tell if the Pats have won with these two. Week in and week out. Year in and year out. These two zealots follow the same pattern after a victory or a loss, no matter how trivial the game. (No game is trivial to a real Diehard. Even exhibition games are important to the overall picture.)

If the boys in red, white and blue win, my husband treats me to dinner and drinks in a restaurant Sunday night. If they lose, a stony silence permeates the house as I toil with the evening meal in the kitchen.

My colleague's ritual following a win includes bounding into the office and chattering incessantly about this play or that. A loss downplays his entrance. The meek editor quietly shuffles into room and stumbles to his desk, uttering nary a word.

Diehards. For them, the past several weeks of glory have been served up giftwrapped by the great grid God in the sky. They're digesting and savoring this and rightly so.

Were you one of those watching the Raiders game scratching your head and wondering just who was this guy Jim Bowman recovering a fumble to score the winning touchdown?

The Diehards knew. They knew Jim Bowman was drafted in the second round, 52nd overall and that he attended Central Michigan. They knew Bowman was compensation, in the form of a draft choice, for the deal that sent Mike Haynes to those despicable Raiders.

In your face Al Davis.

Worried about the Miami jinx? Not these guys. They knew that two of the worst losses in the franchise's history occured in the Orange Bowl (52-0 in 1972 and 41-3 in 1971.) They remembered those losses and laughed at the fabled jinx.

They're confident and always have been. The Patriots will emerge from the Super Bowl victorious. Logic does not enter into the picture. All the years of heartbreaking, frustrating loyalty have paid off and they've found nirvana. They smugly stare at all the newly discovered fans and their lips slowly turn up into a "I told you so" smile.

To my two favorite Diehards and to all of the people inflicted with this particular form of mania. I salute you.

Some people to watch for in the coming year

By Mark White

Each year Boston Magazine writes an article about the people to watch in the upcoming year.

So this year we decided to start a new tradition - people to watch in Newton for 1986.

You won't find any elected officials on this list but rather names of those who have worked hard behind the scenes and have developed a sphere of influence.

So here are the Newton movers and shakers (in no particular order):

Lenny Zakim - Without a doubt Lenny Zakim is moving rapidly up the charts as a political mover in Newton.

As director of the B'nai B'rith Anti-Defamation League of New England, he is well known and has developed a formidable array of contacts.

Among the many other hats he wears are democratic state committeeman and coodinator of the western suburbs for Governor Michael Dukakis.

When the Backman senate seat opened up he was immediately projected as a formidable contender, although he elected not to run. Definitely somebody to watch in the future.

Martin Jackson and Martha Hass - These two seem to come as a team, a very strong team! There is not enough space to write about all their accomplishments.

They have been active in campaigns for a number of candidates including Evelyn Murphy and Jim Shannon.

As a matter of fact, Martina is how a full time staffer for Shannon and Martha has been coordinating fund raising efforts for the former senate candidate.

Both are also extremely active in the campaign of Michael Dukakis.

These two don't just give lip service to political activism - they produce!

Tom Torchia - A political warhorse in the truest tradition, Tom Torchia is extremely influential, particularly on the north side of the city.

There aren't many candidates in the city who don't call Torchia for help.

He's paid his dues ten times over.

Brian Yates - The king of Newton Upper Falls politics, Brian is one of the few people in the city who can get you votes just by standing at the polls.

In addition, he leaflets his whole precinct at least once a year and is a member of every conceivable political and municipal organization.

Tom Paulini - Say what you want about the moratorium effort, the man was successful in publicizing the issue. He has now expanded his horizons to other Newton Centre issues.

Harold Meizler - As chairman of the Zoning Board of Appeals his opinions carry a great deal of influence as to the future development of this city.

Jane Rutan - Former aide to Rep. David Cohen and a driving force behind many progressive candidates, Jane is now the campaign manager for Lois Pines in her quest for the senate seat.

Tony Croce - Long an advocate for Newton Highlands, and a Dukakis chieftain, Tony Croce adopted a new position as President of the Newton Teachers Association and succeeded in getting them an extremely good contract.

Nancy Criscitiello - A long time president of Friends of the Library, and if this city ever gets a new library it will be largely due to the efforts of Nancy Criscitiello.

Nancy Levin - As an Oak Hill Park activist she was greatly influential in organizing the community against the proposed Mt. Ida Junior College development.

Sam Robbins - You may not agree with the man but he certainly is effective in promoting his conservative views. He was largely responsible for defeating the library referendum and he has recently been cited for his proven ability to garner signatures on CLT petitions.

Escalate war on drunken drivers

By George B. Merry

No governor in America has worked harder than the Bay State's Michael S. Dukakis to get drunken drivers off the roads, and keep them off.

Such efforts have included more police patrols, use of roadblocks, videotaping of those suspected of driving while intoxicated (DWI), and surveillance of bars known to have served a number of people later arrested for drunk driving.

The governor and his wife have gone to schools and attended proms to warn students of the dangers of drunk driving and the use of liquor. With his strong support the state's minimum drinking age was raised from 20 to 21, and increased public funding has been provided for alcoholic treatment centers.

These efforts over the past two years have helped deal with the most vexing public-safety challenge facing the commonwealth. But it has hardly been eliminated, as the nearly 139,000 DWI arrests in Massachusetts during the past 12 months attest.

Obviously a much tougher law is needed. Current penalties simply are not working. Part of the problem is that many of those who drive while drunk are not aware of their condition, and those who are don't expect to be caught, or to have an accident.

Thus the possibility of a fine, temporary loss of driver's license, or even a few days in jail often lacks the intended deterrent effect.

Clearly more certain penalties, including perhaps seven consecutive days in jail and the automatic loss of license for not less than a full year for all first-time offenders might help. If nothing else, this would make it inconvenient for the person arrested for DWI. Allowing a second offender to serve his or her time on weekends (in jail or at an alcoholic treatment center) makes it easy for the offender to cover up the misconduct.

Certainly it would be more of a stigma and less of a secret to neighbors, fellow workers, and friends if the confinement and loss of license were for longer periods.

In many instances those arrested for DWI, especially first-time offenders, get off with what amounts to little more than a polite brush across the knuckles with a feather duster. It may simply be too hard for judges, some of whom may have been drunk drivers themselves on occasion, to see that justice is done.

Not frequently, people guilty of drunk driving are the beneficiaries of perhaps misguided compassion from the courts, especially when there was no accident involved and jailing or loss of license might pose a hardship for the driver and his family.

Those who endanger themselves and others by driving while drunk, especially repeat offenders, should be treated equally. Unless they are, Bay State drunk-driving laws will remain a mockery.

The thrust of any anti-drunk-driving program should be to protect the public from a potential menace in its midst.

Last year's outlawing of so-called "happy hours" - when drinks are sold at reduced prices thus encouraging increased liquor consumption - should cut down on DWI during early evenings. A logical next step would be to increase substantially police spot-checks of all establishments where liquor is served, to make sure that those who appear drunk do not get behind the wheel when they leave.

Such an arrangement would be anything but welcomed by operators of bars, especially those whose bartenders and other employees are less than careful how much they serve patrons.

To suggest that there are just 18 such places, which was the number involved in last summer's special State Police surveillance effort, is unrealistic. Places known to have served drunks later involved in DWI-related accidents may not be the only ones consistently catering to drunk drivers.

Such establishments must bear at least some of the reposibility for the problem they are contributing to.

The temporary suspension of liquor license would be an economic hardship to a bar owner. But if it would result in keeping a few drunks off the road, it would be in society's best interest.

For this reason the governor and the legislature might want to consider much longer - even permanent - suspension of the alcoholic beverage licenses of places caught serving those who are drunk.

A few closed bars might help keep operators of other liquor establishments from risking similar punishment.

Drunk driving is a crime. Drunk driving and those who promote as well as participate in it are guilty and should be brought to the bar of justice speedily and without special favor, whether they are pillars of the community or members of the underworld.

It might be helpful to require all judges handling DWI cases to file with decisions a written statement explaining why an offender was given less than the maximum penalty - something the convicted drunk driver and those around him will not soon forget.

Seat belt law a pain, but a necessary one

Larry Grady

Atty. Michael Pappas who practices law from a Waltham office and lives in Newton, was walking through the parking lot at Waltham High School on a recent sunny, but cold morning. Pappas is jovial by temperament, but this morning he was serious. "Personally," he said, "I think the (automobile) seat belt law is a pain and I told the kids that. But it's the law and we should follow it."

Pappas was one of several professional men and women who volunteered to talk during a career day at Waltham High. It is part of a Boy Scout Explorer program to let high school juniors hear from "those out in the world." Pappas talked on the legal profession and the law. His reference to the seat belt law was incidental, but a concern most of us are facing at the moment.

My wife says we should put a sign on the dashboard of the car to "buckle up." Frankly we forget. And frankly, we agree with Atty. Pappas. The seat belt law is a pain.

In the winter time, one has to take off gloves and push aside coats to get the belt hooked. Sometimes one gets buckled up and then remembers he forgot something. It is exasperating to mail a letter. One unbuckles and then must buckle up again. Yes, it's a pain.

Many people think the seat belt law is an unconstitutional infringement on their freedom. They want to be responsible for their own fate. There will be at least an advisory question on the ballot to see if the voters agree with our legislators. There may even be a mandatory referendum on the ballot in November if enough outraged drivers sign petition papers. One radio talk show host in Boston has turned his anti-seat belt rage into a crusade of sorts.

When the seat belt law was first considered in the legislature and Gov. Michael Dukakis started putting some steam into his efforts to get the law enacted, the Kiwanis Club members in Waltham debated it. Many were surprised when a slight majority came out against the law.

Those opposed to the law are, by and large, concerned with their own freedom, their own convenience. But that's not the reason we pass laws. Laws are passed for the common good, the general welfare.

As Waltham's Traffic Enginer Michael Burke put it once, "Remember, your accident increases my car insurance."

We are not talking chicken feed. My insurance man says, "If you don't carry at least $100,000–$300,000 liability coverage, you're crazy. Look at what those juries are bringing in for damages."

Consider the following:

In Massachusetts, 450 people are killed in automobile accidents each year with another 50,000 seriously injured. Based on the experience of other states which put in seat belt laws, we can expect to save 125 lives and cut the injury total by some 3,000.

During your lifetime, you have a 50 percent chance of getting into an accident.

In the past, the only time I remember using a seat belt was shortly after one of my sons got his license and he took off on Route 6 on Cape Cod without serious concern for the speed limits. But the facts are that 80 percent of all accidents, that is, four out of five accidents, happen at 40 miles an hour or less. People have died in crashes of less than 12 miles an hour.

I remember covering an accident years ago when a car hit a utility pole at 20 miles an hour. But the car door popped open, the driver hit the pavement head first and broke his neck. His girl friend was with him. She watched it happen. She didn't attend the funeral. Last I heard she was still in a mental hospital.

Seat belts prevent the most serious and expensive form of injury: the head injury. The average cost to treat and care for a person with a serious head injury is somewhere between $1.6 million and $2.5 million during the person's lifetime.

Recently I arrived at an accident scene as the last ambulance was leaving. Two people died and one of them was a child. Maybe the passenger in the right front seat, the so-called "death seat" in car accidents, wouldn't have survived even with a seat belt on. But if the child had been in a restraint, there is no question she would have been alive today.

For the common good, for the general welfare and for your children's sake as well as your own, we had better buckle up. Sure it's a pain, but it's better than riding in a wheel chair, maybe for the rest of your life.

CRWA to the rescue again

Charles River Watershed Association to the rescue again! No sooner had we ceased being a conduit for information on the Dec. 13 oil spill and resulting wildfowl disaster than we began getting telephone complaints that ice fishermen were being chased off the Charles River by MetroPolice. The police said the fishermen were "trespassing on MDC property" and registration numbers were being recorded.

As we know that the winter fisherman come to the Lakes District from a wide area, may we spread the good news with your help? The MDC did indeed issue a directive to keep people off Charles River ice but it appears now that it was a directed at children attracted to thin ice. It appears to have been misinterpreted by the police as a general order. Asserting, as we do, that the river belongs to the people, we reacted to complaints with some phone calls to the MDC. The order has now been clarified and the police instructed to leave the ice fisherman alone.

In truth, MetroPolice concern is public safety. Ours is too. We urge people planning to ice-fish to know their limits and the limits of the ice. The Lakes District coves are usually quite safe, as they are shallow and freeze quickly. We do not recommend fishing in the main channel unless there has been a very extended and deep freeze, because the river has a very active flow beneath the ice and ice formation is slower. And anyone thinking of walking across the Basin between Boston and Cambridge should think twice. The Charles does not freeze beneath or near the bridges, and elsewhere there should be a deep freeze producing measurable ice (perhaps a foot) before it might be prudent to venture forth. The public should be allowed full enjoyment of its river but the public must take major personal responsibility for personal actions. Where the river is concerned, we do not recommend taking risks, however benign the Charles may seem.

We're pleased that people know where to call to get action or solve a problem and we appreciate your informing the ice fisherman that they can now return to their favorite fishing holes under appropriate weather conditions.

South students are thanked

Holiday time can sometimes be a lonely and forgotten time. This is often true for many of the mentally ill. This year the patients at Newton-Wellesley-Weston-Needham Unit had their holidays made brighter through the generous and thoughtful efforts of the seniors of Newton South.

Christmas morning the patients each received a big red stocking filled with candy, toiletries and the like. Each stocking was handmade and decorated by the students. The patients and staff want to thank the Newton South students and tell them how much the stockings were appreciated. It's especially nice for the patients to think that during this busy holiday season they are remembered by the young people of the community.

As director of Volunteer Services at the hospital, my thanks and warm holiday wishes to the students of Newton South and their teacher, Mrs. Paula Mealey.

Change in school hours considered

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Two short school days twice a week may be the highlight of many elementary school children's week, but some parents at a public hearing last week said they would like to see those school days extended by two hours.

Parents said they want to know if their children are being short-changed and if the quality of education is suffering on short days.

Director of Elementary Education Dr. Melvin Hines said the purpose of the hearing at the Brown Junior High School was to get parents' comments on the structure of the elementary school week before he submits a report to the School Committee next week.

"My point is to invite parents to participate in the decision-making process so their ideas and opinions will be expressed to the School Committee," Hines said.

Elementary school teachers use short days for curriculum enrichment planning as well as parent and teacher conferences, Hines said. Several parents support the idea of time allotted for teacher development and said they do not want to see quality education sacrificed for longer school days.

"I'm not so sure longer is better," Elizabeth Stewart said. "Good teaching comes out of intensive preparation, and it would be a terrible mistake to give up what's important to teachers when they are responsible for the enrichment of our children's education."

Several parents said there is room in the curriculum to cover subjects not taught in the elementary schools, such as foreign languages.

"From what I understand, young children are more capable of learning foreign languages at an early age, and I've heard on several occasions that there aren't enough hours in the week for such subject," Francis Frank said. "Maybe the extension of the short days would be a good opportunity for such work."

Frank also said extended days could be used to teach more social studies and science courses that are not taught every day. According to Frank, it makes for a hectic day when three of her children all have different school dismissal times.

"I would like to see a general dismissal time for all the schools, which would make the school day and week more consistent and routine for our children," Frank said.

One parent said her children "moan and groan" when they have long days, and emphasized children would be more motivated if they had a routine schedule.

Although most parents support the professional enrichment time allotted to teachers on Tuesdays and Thursdays, several of them said they are not able to evaluate how useful the time is unless teachers explain how they use the time.

"How do we as parents know that the teachers take advantage of this time, and if they do, we would like to see how," Jane Dyer said. "It would be extremely helpful if teachers could explain how they organize the curriculum so we are more capable to evaluate it."

Former teacher and school administrator Ellen Glanz said teachers need professional development time for motivation so they can feel good about what they are doing. Now, as a parent, Glanz questions the wisdom in allowing children so much time on their hands.

Glanz has a kindergartener who has been in day care from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. since she was three months old.

Her daughter's weekly school schedule involves three days of physical education, one day of library and music, one day of art, and only 1½ hours of instruction a week, Glanz said.

"Her three-hour day is almost an absurdity, and I know she could use a lot more stimulation. She's hungering for it," Glanz said.

Glanz suggested the schools provide an option for a full school day because it may not be appropriate for all students.

"There should be some flexibility for parents and teachers to make a choice appropriate for the individual child," Glanz said.

Putting scholastics aside, families with two working parents said they have a difficult time shuffling their schedules to accommodate the hours of their children's staggered school week.

"It's very difficult to schedule our working schedule around the early dismissal times on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and it's also very difficult getting to work on time when our children don't start school until 8:45 in the morning," Elaine Shuman said. "I can't believe that you don't need more hours for kids to learn."

These parents suggested it would be more useful to begin the school day earlier rather than extending the day later in the afternoon.

On the other hand, Mia Abbott said, the schools are not supposed to babysit or perform as day care centers for children.

Local artist scores again

NEWTON — The Newton Arts Council thought enough of 19-year-old artist James Wrye's first 1985 calendar, with its drawings of notable city buildings and scenes, to make a symbolic contribution of $300 toward funding his second effort.

His new 1986 calendar focuses on Newton buildings and scenes "as they were when built" — mostly in the 1890s. Last year's scenes depicted buildings as they are today. Next year's pen and ink scenes will concentrate on "lost treasures" — buildings that have disappeared.

One of Wrye's personal favorites this year is a sketch of Firehouse 6, in Newton Lower Falls, shown as it was around the turn of the century with horse-drawn engines.

Wrye's style with pen and ink brings out a wealth of detail. Even in black and white, Wrye's style maintains a look of lightness and brightness.

He uses half-tones instead of line cuts because "there is so much fine pencil shading, half tones are needed to pick it up."

In researching scenes, Wrye says he spent a lot of time at the Jackson Homestead assisted by its Director Duscha Scott. "She was very helpful and they let me see many of their old photos and reproductions of early Newton. The Newton Free Library in Newton Corner also let me see their collections," Wrye said.

The Jackson Homestead on Washington Street is featured for the month of June. It is shown as it appeared about 1809 with two children in the foreground striking hoops with sticks as they move down the driveway.

Another striking drawing in the calendar is for May showing a Mansard style Victorian house in Newton Centre. All the windows and turrets are typical of the era including a small tower with picturesque windows that don't make for efficient heating today.

Other scenes and buildings in the calendar include Echo Bridge in Newton Upper Falls in January, Colby Hall in Newton Centre in 1886, the First Baptist Church in Newton Centre in 1889, the Newton Highlands Railroad Depot as it appeared in 1896, the Emmanuel Baptist Church in Newton Corner in 1885, St. Mary's Episcopal Church in Newton Lower Falls in 1816, a Union Street scene, circa 1897, The Masonic Building in Newtonville in 1890s and the Newton Presbyterian Church in Newton Corner in 1884.

In a dedication written on the back of the calendar, Wrye writes: "To my patrons: Thank you for your support by purchasing this calendar. I made all the illustrations to show the beauty that was and is our city. Each sketch is designed to show the architecture and its surroundings when it, and our Newton, was new."

Each calendar sells for $7.50 and can be obtained at Bond and Burkhart.

Inside and outside of the ball

A legacy of war in Israel

Atop a roof of a building in the Arab quarter of Jerusalem, with the frigid winter wind whistling through a makeshift canopy, it is easy to let the mind wander back through the years. Where the green-clad Israeli soldier with a Galiel rifle slung across his shoulder now walks, the soldiers of Maccabee, Syria, Pompeii and the Crusaders also have walked, fought and died — all in the name of whomever it was they called God.

In the daylight hours, there is a wary truce in this old city where the pious go to pray — Jews to the Wailing Wall, Muslims to the Dome of the Rock and Christians to the Church of the Holy Sepluchure. Each in his own group, the pious pass one another in the narrow streets, seemingly oblivious to the others who also call this place holy — a fact easily forgotten amidst the millenia of warfare. Perhaps, if the pious happened to sit down and talk, they would realize that in fact, they worship the same thing.

The rift, according to both the Bible and the Koran, started when Abraham — at the behest of his wife Sarah who for 13 years was barren until the birth of Issac — kicked son Ishmael and his slave-girl mother Hagar out of their desert tent. While Jews claim that Abraham's son Issac was offered to God as a sacrifice, Muslims say it was Ishmael. What neither seems to realize is that, no matter which version is correct, Arab and Jew are cousin to each other.

It is not that the opportunity to talk doesn't exist. There are, amazingly enough, bastions of tranquility in this stormy sea. A small watering hole — Open Sesame — exists as a place for the young — Jews, Muslims and Christians — to sit down over a beer and forget differences that have resulted in uncounted lives lost for holy causes. Sex, drugs and rock and roll replace religion as topics of discussion in this oasis. Jim Morrison and the Doors blast over conversations of these young wanderers, who like their many-ancestors have come to this city to see what all the commotion is about.

But Fayed, the owner — who says that even during the wars people came to drink and laugh — closes shop at midnight and the revellers scurry off to their respective hostels. At this point, the mirth of the previous hours dies as the streets once again become a no-man's land. To walk the streets unescorted and unarmed is to put one's life at risk. An unidentified body is not an uncommon find.

Whatever silence there is ends at about 4:30 a.m. as the stone buildings reverberate with the call to the Mosque. An hour later, church bells toll off in the distance. By this time, though, the city is active. Trucks and bikes roll in, stocked with wares for the Shuks, the Arab bazaar.

Even before the sun fully rises over the Dome of the Rock, the streets are alive with sellers pitching their products — rugs and hookhas, bananas and felafel. Many a sheckle changes hands in a manner that hasn't changed despite all the wars and all the different people who have claimed ownership to this place.

It is another day in Jerusalem, and while overhead jet airplanes travel to faraway lands, not much has changed down here. There is still hatred and fear, anger and despair. It always was, and it seems, it always will be this way in the Holy City.

Arts Lottery grants available

NEWTON — The Newton Arts Lottery Council has Massachusetts Arts Lottery grant applications available through its office at the Newton Parks and Recreation Department. The deadline for applications is March 4.

Both individual artists and arts organizations are eligible to apply for grants which are funded twice yearly by the Newton Arts Lottery Council. Those of a creative and innovative nature from individual artists and organizations are most welcome. Applicants should be aware that the council tends to give partial funding to projects rather than assume the full financial responsibility.

Applications can be secured in person or will be mailed upon receipt of a self-addressed stamped legal sized envelope to the Newton Arts Lottery Council, 70 Crescent St., Auburndale.

If further information is required, call 552-7120.

much of a necessity," she explains, because of the ease of preparing meals after shopping in today's grocery stores, which offer salad bars and frozen and prepared hot foods. A plethora of gourmet take-out shops also make life easier for time-constrained cooks.

"Even kids are learning to cook," Glass says. And so are men.

The male chefs of Los Angeles are now the "heros of America," she says. There's Jeremiah Tower, Wolfgang Puck, Michael of "Michaels." In Boston, Bruce Frankel, Frank McClelland, Bob Kincaid, Jasper of "Jasper's" and Moncef Maddeb of "L'Espalier" are well-known.

"Eating out used to be rare and a treat," she says. But the "fast food syndrome," vis-a-vis McDonald's, has changed all that.

"Everyone's worrying about what McDonald's is doing to the tastebuds of America. I don't worry about taste. People will still go to McDonald's but people know better food than that."

The fast-food chain "hasn't changed what people eat, but how they eat. People are much more used to going out, not only to McDonald's but to ethnic restaurants."

In the 1960s, Glass recalls, there were only mandarin Chinese and southern Italian restaurants.

But since then, "people have traveled more and the world shrank," says Glass. Americans learned more about Japanese foods and other foreign delicacies.

Now Chinese and Italian restaurants from various regions of those countries are available alongside victualers serving Thai and Vietnamese foods.

"We're exposed to so much more in our food," Glass says.

The 1960s Julia Child book and television show and the "back to the land" movement and "hippie" movement made people more aware of natural foods, sprouts and granola.

"People began to cook and take cooking lessons so that by the 1970s Julia Child was a household word. People learned about French techniques and food — mousse, crepes, quiches and all those French words.

"Wine became very important and something you drank with dinner."

Now, in the 1980s, however, American cooks "feel very secure and don't need those French words anymore," Glass says. They have successfully combined techniques and trends from the past decades, and now Americans are "eating fresher, healthier foods."

These days, she continues, "Good restaurants are thriving. American regionalism has come into its own. . . Now every region has its own pride and emphasis."

For example, she explains, Washington state has salmon, oysters and fruit, while southern cooking offers creole and cajun dishes and southern biscuits. And, of course, from the southwestern region of the country, Tex-Mex cooking is popular.

As to her own tastes, Glass, 40, says she still identifies with the 1960s. The era "had a big impact on my life" so that goats, of which Glass and her family owns two, "was a logical extension." They make good pets, she says, and she makes goat cheese out of their milk.

She and her family own a large home they remodeled out of a barn. The house sits on three-quarters of an acre along with a stable for the goats, a vegetable garden and a grave for the family's late golden retriever.

Yet, Glass states, "I'm not a Yuppie," because she still makes her own jam and soup — something that young upwardly mobile professionals have no time for.

Glass is a member of the International Association of Cooking Professionals and the Boston Culinary Guild. She studied with Madeleine Kamman, the famous cook who used to own a restaurant, "Modern Gourmet," in Newton Centre.

In addition to conducting cooking classes out of her home, Glass has taught a cooking class in the Newton Community Schools for the past eight years. She has also run her own Sunday morning catering service. Her next article, on cooking with chocolate, will appear in the February issue of "Bon Appetit."

Jewels & Gems

BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY

GARNET

Garnet, the official birthstone of January, comes in almost every color except blue. It ranges from pale orange to dark red and violet. At its best, the garnet is deep, rich red or purple-red. Early scientists named the stone from the Latin "granatus," which means "seedlike." Garnet crystals reminded them of the shape and color of pomegranate seeds. The garnet was known thousands of years before the Christian era. In ancient writings, it was probably mentioned as a ruby or carcuncle. The latter term is still applied to the red garnet cut in the cabochon form. The garnet is quite durable and many pieces of antique garnet jewelry are still being worn today. Its long history and durability seem to confirm its promise of constancy.

When you want to be informed about the jewelry you buy come to CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" at 109 Dalby St., Newton. Our staff is very knowledgeable in the area of gem stones. We carry a beautiful array of all stones so you're most likely to find the color you want. Birthstone rings are very popular and so are mother's rings. Let us design one expressly for you. See our dazzling display Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

HELPFUL HINT

The most expensive garnet is the brilliant green variety. It approaches the emerald shade and exceeds the diamond in fire.

Wellesley Hospital where he received eight stitches, Kelley said.

Henderson and Officer Stephen Walsh were responding to reports of a fight in progress at 81 West St. when the incident occurred, Kelley said.

When they arrived at the scene, three or four people were outside the West Street home and Walsh got in a struggle with Colarusso's wife, Naomi, Kelley said. Walsh testified that because she is tall and he approached her from behind, he did not realize she was a woman, Kelley said.

Naomi Colarusso had been inside arguing about rent with Susan Johnson, a tenant at the West Street residence, which is owned by Naomi Colarusso's mother, said the district attorney. Johnson testified she was intoxicated at the time, Kelley said.

"They were arguing inside and there was a little bit of pushing and shoving going on," said Kelley.

Naomi Colarusso left the second floor apartment with her six-year-old son, but as the two entered her car, Johnson came outside to continue the argument, said Kelley.

Walsh wrestled Naomi Colarusso to the ground, apparently in the belief the two women were in a fight, said Kelley. Michael Colarusso, who had been with friends on the front porch of 73 West St., approached and Henderson stood between him and his wife, Kelley said.

"Essentially, Henderson is guarding Walsh's back," said the district attorney attorney.

Henderson terson testified that he said 'hold it' ld it' to Michael Colarusso and strund struck the Waltham man after he er he refussed to stop, Kelley said. Ulaid. Under questioning from Judge Mudge Murphy and Kelley, Henderson said on said Colarusso did not raise his hand d hand or make any sign he was going to oing to strike the officer, according to g to the district attorney.

Henderson terson testified Michael Colarusso was o was rushing towards Walsh and his wife his wife, bout Colarusso said he was gr was going towards his son, who was o was in the street, according to Kelle to Kelley.

The Walth Waltham man was bleeding "fair "fairly heavily" and police radioed to dioed for an ambulance, which took hir ok him to the hospital, Kelley said. aid.

Several days al days later Michael Colarusso receive eceived a Newton Police summons to a s to a hearing to determine if a compla complaint for disorderly conduct s uct should be issued against him, th him, the district attorney said.

Sgt. James James Maguire, patrol supervisor th sor that night, testified that Michael Michael Colarusso had been arrested at th at the scene of the incident, Kelley Kelley said. But under cross-examin examination, Henderson and Maguire guire said the Waltham man was not s s not searched at the time and no officer officer accompanied him in the ambula mbulance, the district attorney said. said.

Asked why th why no police officer went with Mi ith Michael Colarusso to the hospital, Nopital, Maguire said it was a "technical e ical error," according to Kelley.

Henderson's erson's appeal will be taken to a "Jo a "Jury of Six," which hears appea appeals from district court, said Kel said Kelley.

Why they pick ket

AUBURNDALE — Karen Calabrese walked the picket line not only for her husband, a patrolman here for the last 11 years, but also for her two young children.

"They haven't had a contract for three years," she said as she walked along in the biting cold. "I've been laid off and its not easy raising a family. Year after year it gets more costly, especially as the kids get older."

Ronald Calabrese walked along his wife and two children, Tammy, 16, and Randy, 9.

"It's a matter of principle," he said. "There should be equal pay raises for all city employees. We should all get the same percentages."

Calabrese, a Framingham resident, said the only way he is able to make ends meet is by working "almost full-time" remodelling kitchens.

Ironically, if Lt. James O'Donnell and 12 other officers had not been assigned to make sure the protest did not get out of hand, they would have walked the picket line with their colleagues.

"If I wasn't here in uniform, I'd be with them right there. All of us are affected by contract negotiations," said O'Donnell, a 17-year veteran of the force.

Some of the guests to Mayor Theodore D. Mann's inaugural did not appreciate the delays caused by the demonstration.

St. Mary of Carmen Society stalwart Dominic Messina lost his patience and nearly plowed his car into a crowd of demonstrators bunched up in the Marriott's driveway.

Alderman Elaine Gentile and her husband, Bernie Donovan, parked far back on Commonwealth Avenue and walked to the hotel.

"It's disgusting," Gentile steamed. "I've been a strong supporter of both these unions, but there's a time and a place for everything. If their gripe is with the mayor, they shouldn't cause problems for everybody else."

But Alderman Susan Basham did not n not seem to mind the delay as she she waited for the car she was ri s riding in to be signalled throug rough a crease in the picket line. e.

"I sympathize thize with them. They're trying ring to make a point. As far as I as I'm concerned they're protestin esting the mayor's position and this this is the place to do it," Basham sham said.

Bobby McColl McCollough, a West Newton residen ident who works security for the the Marriott, expressed his pers personal opinion in support of the the city's public safety employees oyees.

"I don't blam blame them. By law, they can't an't even strike if they want to. to. The residents here expect the their police and fire departmen ments to be the best, but the the leaders aren't even willing to g to pay these people enough so th so they can afford to live here,' ere," McCollough said.

Lt. Dick Nug Nugent, a 35-year veteran of the the Police Department, said he jo he joined the picket line to show sh w support for his union.

"We have sol solidarity. We've got to let pe people know the situation. It's It's a dangerous business. I don' don't think you can put a price on e on that," Nugent said.

One policewo ewoman with more than 10 years o urs on the force said the only way way for the city to keep attracting cting quality public safety personn rsonnel is to offer them quality pa y pay.

"I think the the citizens need to know what th t the public safety employees of th of the city are going through. gh. It's getting increasingly diff difficult to provide good healthy lthy suppport for their own fami families," she said.

Rich Ciccon ccone, the chairman of the bargain rgaining committee for firefighter hters and a 15-year veteran, said said the picketing may foreshad shadow a new round of militant ant activism by disgruntled uned union employees.

"Sitting do down at the table with the ma mayor's representatives for ov r over two years has gotten us now nowhere. In my opinion this is on is only the beginning of a new tren trend of bargaining. They give us e us no other choice," Ciccone said. said.

were declared at an impassse in April 1984. It expired two months later.

In the wake of the failed ratification effort, no new talks toward a new agreement have been scheduled.

The NFA's last contract with the city also expired in June 1984. Another bargaining session with firefighters was scheduled for today.

The unions, who claim department morale is "at an all-time low," criticized Mann's "unwillingness" to meet their wage and benefit demands.

Their pamphlets distributed to guests of the inaugural ball apologized for "any inconvenience" caused by the demonstration.

Marriott officials took the protest in stride by wheeling out a cart with hot coffee and cookies for the picketers.

"We're a good neighbor. We appreciate the City of Newton's workers," said John Foley, director of marketing for the Marriott.

Marriott spokesman Michael Shulman said the refreshments were the hotel's idea, but Mayor Mann later claimed that he had asked that "coffee and sandwiches" be brought to the protestors.

During a reception before the ball began, Mann said he had thought police would ratify a wage package similar to that accepted by other municipal unions, but stated the city's intention "to go back to bargaining table."

In a speech to the huge crowd of supporters gathered inside inside, the mayor described the angry ngry union members as "friends" and and joked, "Never before in the hist history of the Marriott has there been been such good security outside.

"This too shall pass," Ma Mann added.

Fire Chief Edward B. EB. Reilly, Jr., would not comment ent on the situation.

Police Chief William F. n F. Quinn said he was "surprised" ed" at the landslide of the NPA's cos contract rejection and credited the u the union's bargaining team for "tryin rying hard to sell" the pact.

But Quinn, who was as driven through the angry crowd wd along with his wife, criticize icized the picketers for tying up traff traffic and delaying guests trying to g to enter the hotel parking lot.

Mann reportedly check ecked into a rented suite early Sa Saturday afternoon before the dem demonstration began.

NFA President Kevin Mi in McArdle said the protest's goal was was to "let people know that things ang s aren't as rosy as the chief executiv cutive likes to paint."

Citing the city's record s rd surplus, McArdle added, "We're re not asking for the world. We just just want a fair settlement. This just just shows that everything is comi oming to a head."

NPA President Lynda nda Glenn said her union's contrac ct ract rejection represented "a stron strong statement that their wages ar s are not at all acceptable.

"They question the the city's priorities by giving teac e achers and cutsodians higher pay pay raises. This demonstration is our our way of say that we aren't going to take it sitting down," she added. ded.

Flew from Africa for face treatment

NEWTON — Jessica Neal, 4, recently flew from Freetown, Sierra Leone, in West Africa, to Newton-Wellesley Hospital for treatment.

After falling down a flight of stairs, cutting her forehead and receiving stitches, her wound festered and Freetown doctors feared that she might have a septic cavernous thrombosis, a potentially life-threatening condition.

"We all agreed the weather situation was tricky, that we were going into a freeze," said Fraser. "Between the football and whatever, we were not getting the response we hoped for."

Scalese himself became as much a subject of the debate as the department's handling of the storm.

Driving about noon, Alderman Polly Bryson said, no streets in Auburndale were plowed. She called the DPW and was told operations were slow getting under way because plows had to be removed from the trucks.

"At that time, Mr. Scalese assured me every street in Auburndale would be sanded," Bryson said. "I felt I was being pacified."

An hour later, a DPW worker called to say two sanders were headed for Auburndale.

Tempers ignited when Alderman Richard McGrath, who is not a committee member, asked Scalese to list his qualifications for the deputy commissioner's job.

Scalese bristled at the question, charging it was irrelevant. At one point, he said McGrath was out of the city during the storm. McGrath in turn charged that remark had no bearing as it is not his but Scalese's job to be on duty during a storm.

Scalese thr ese threatened to leave the meeting as th g as the argument heated up, only to ly to be restrained by Hickey.

Alderman rman Paul Daley criticized Scalese be lese because of an alleged 10 a.m. call to call to sand the deputy commissione issioner's own street — Westview Te iew Terrace — and adjoining Pleas Pleasant Street. Four parallel stre el streets were untouched, he said. Scal d. Scalese denied his street was plowed l owed before others.

"It just o just doesn't look good," Daley said o said of the call. "I would have done e done every side street it I did one stree e street."

Marini sai ini said he lives in Nonantum near n ear many DPW workers and hears a g ars a great deal from them about Scales Scalese's job performance. "I'd love to ve to see what goes on the next time an me and I'll know," he said.

The argum argument reached its pitch when Scale Scalese shot back sarcastically th ally that he wanted to hear what they they say about him in Marini's a i's area, "the cultural center of Ma r of Massachusetts."

Marini an ini angrily responded that while living living in "The Lake" he put himself thro lf through college by working on snow-un snow-plowing teams.

McGrath, cGrath, who earlier alleged the DPW ha PW has been slow responding to the l to the last three storms, said aldermen rmen can do little to guarantee ntee better performance in the future. ture.

"The issu he issue is, "What are we going to do?" o do?"" he asked. "Nothing. You keep b keep beating on them until they do the to do the job right."

Proudly Presenting...
"The Freedom Eagles"
By Michael Boyett
A powerful, new, original work of art portraying two American eagles soaring freely in full flight.
• Individually cast, hand-finished and hand-rubbed to the rich luster of classic bronze.
• Serially numbered, hallmarked and accompanied by a Certificate of Registration.
• Issued in a Limited Edition of only 9500 sculptures.
Wheeling aloft through the vast American skies, two superb American eagles touch, for an instant, in a brief moment of shared freedom. It is an extraordinary sight which has inspired the famed American sculptor, Michael Boyett, to create his dramatic new work, "The Freedom Eagles."
A powerful portrayal of the soaring symbols of our nation's liberty, "The Freedom Eagles" is now being issued for the first time ever by the New England Collectors Society, a subsidiary of Reed & Barton Silversmiths, the distinguished American firm which has been creating fine products since 1824.
"The Freedom Eagles" is issued in a permanently limited Edition of only 9500 individually serially numbered sculptures. Each sculpture will also be hallmarked and accompanied by a Certificate of Registration.
Exceptionally detailed to a degree of intricacy that will astonish you, each "Freedom Eagles" sculpture is individually cast in cold-cast bronze, the special blend of fine powdered bronze and resins which captures even finer detail than traditional hot-casting. It is a masterpiece of art in a museum quality casting that is destined to be a treasured family heirloom.
To acquire your "Freedom Eagles" by Michael Boyett, no payment is required now. But be sure to mail your reservation application right away.

Police, court briefs

Volatile chemical missing

NEWTONVILLE — A two-pound jar of the chemical sodium was reported missing from Newton North High School Friday. The volatile chemical was taken from a storage room. The pea-sized sodium pellets are stored in kerosene. If exposed to air, the pellets spontaneously ignite, and if exposed to water, they burn violently. Police are investigating the theft.

Thief nabs $70 from wallet

AUBURNDALE — A Camden Road home was broken into last week and $70 was stolen from a wallet, police said. A babysitter was attending to a child on the second floor of the home when she heard noises in the kitchen. According to police, the babysitter went downstairs to see who was there when she heard a door slam. A purse was found open with a wallet missing, but the wallet was later found in the driveway with $70 missing, police said. The thief entered the dwelling through an unlocked back door, police said.

Home is burglarized

WEST NEWTON — A Duffield Road home was broken into last week and a 13-inch color television and approximately six gold rings were stolen, police said. The thieves broke a window to enter the dwelling and left through an unlocked cellar door, police said.

Intruder steals purse

NEWTON — A woman living on Dunklee Road reported the theft of her purse Saturday. A bank card and approximately $120 in cash were taken. The victim said $40 was stolen out of a jacket pocket and $10 was taken from the kitchen table.

Man faces larceny charge

NEWTON — Stephen Leone of Newton was arraigned in district court last week on a charge of larceny by check on Nov. 9, 1984. Leone allegedly wrote a $775 check with knowledge of insufficient funds in his account. The defendant was released on personal recognizance. The case was continued to Jan. 27.

Barbells stolen from spa

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — The Nautilus on 160 Charlemont was broken into last week, and an unknown number of barbells were stolen, police said. The thieves entered the building by smashing a window and slipping the window lock open, police said.

Winter garments stolen

NEWTON CORNER — A cashmere coat, leather gloves and a scarf were stolen from the coatroom in Temple Emanuel on Ward Street last week, police said.

Attendant is scam victim

NEWTON — A man driving a 1982 Chevrolet sedan managed to confuse a gas station attendant on Route 9 while asking for change of several large bills. The man got away with $20, police said. According to police, the gas station attendant did not realize he had been a scam victim until after the man drove away.

Picket fence damaged

NEWTON CORNER — A picket fence at a Parker Street home was damaged maliciously last week, according to police, who said 25 feet of the fence was destroyed but the cause of the damage is unknown.

House flood draws police

NEWTON — The police and fire departments responded to a call of a flooded house Sunday night. According to police, there was water running out of the Lutheran Service Association building on Washington Street. Police entered the house through the first-floor window and turned off the water main, police said.

Car taken from resident

NEWTON — A 1982 Toyota Celica was stolen from a Commonwealth Avenue resident last week, police said.

Chief Quinn urges residents to wear their seat belts

NEWTON — Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn strongly supports the new mandatory seat belt law. "Seat belts are the most effective means of saving lives and reducing the severity of injuries from motor vehicle accidents," he stated. Public Safety officials throughout the state are committed to enforcing all motor vehicle laws including the mandatory seat belt law.

On Jan. 1, Massachusetts became the 16th state to enforce a mandatory seat belt law. If a motorist is stopped for another violation, the driver and any passengers not wearing a seat belt can be given a citation, said Chief Quinn.

The driver of a vehicle is responsible for passengers under age 16. Passengers over age 16 are responsible for their own fines and a violation of the law under Chapter 90, Sec. 7BB carries a $15 fine.

Newton police officers have received copies of the new law and instruction on how the secondary enforcement is to take place. The chief urges all residents to use seat belts, not only on long trips but also for short trips and when running errands. Most accidents happen within 15 miles of a person's home.

Take the law to heart.
Buckle up Massachusetts!

Motor vehicle accidents are the leading cause of death among people under age 45. It is estimated that the use of seat belts will cut fatalities between 35 and 50 percent. Another very important reason for wearing seat belts is the amount and severity of injuries will be reduced by about 50 percent over all.

Chief Quinn concluded by stating, "Police officers throughout the state have been issuing tickets since the beginning of the New Year for violations of the seat belt law. I hope people will voluntarily use the seat belts for its safety features."

Sen. Kerry to speak

NEWTON — U.S. Senator John F. Kerry will address a joint Brotherhood and Sisterhood Breakfast at Temple Reyim at 1860 Washington St., Newton, on Sunday, Jan. 19 at 9:15 a.m. Kerry will discuss "U.S. Foreign Policy: Soviet Jewry."

The public is invited. Breakfast will be served. Reservations are required. Donations are $6 per person. Reservations may be made by calling the Temple at 527-2410.

Family, friends are proud of a job 'well done'

The Lucente family of Wellesley and Newton is filled with justifiable pride as they enter the new year.

George and Betty Lucente are the proprietors of the Walnut Food Store in Newton Highlands which they operate successfully with the help of their children, Alan, James, and Barbara, each of whom had given up other pursuits in order to assist in the family's business. Another son, Michael, who operates his own trucking company, also pitches in behind the counter when he finds time.

However, the pride is directed toward a missing sibling, who is a captain in the U.S. Marines on the West Coast. Captain William Lucente recently was the recepient of a cash award of $3,000 from the Department of the Navy's Beneficial Suggestion Program for a security suggestion that in its first year will save the Navy over $100,000.

William Lucente's suggestion came about as a result of his early training with his father, George, when he operated a service station in Newton, and that training came into focus when his batallion received new M16-A2 rifles, which had a configuration allowing them to be securely stowed in existing racks.

Captain Lucente, a member of the ships company of the U.S.S. Saipan and responsible for the security of the weapons, discovered that adapters issued to secure the weapons in the existing storage racks, could be converted with a little ingenuity and the rifles removed without authorization or could be stolen.

Lucente's early training with his father, came to fore, and after a number of efforts he came up with a "Z"-shaped sleeve which would adapt to present racks and would accomodate both the newly issued M16-A1 and the A1 issue which is still being used by other Marine units and NATO allies in the Pacific.

The "Z" sleeves were not only adaptable they were inexpensive, saving in excess of $100,000.

Lucente's commander and his associates, noting the work he put into a number of sleeves and his persistence in making modifications until he came up with a working model, insisted that he diagram his design and submit it to the Beneficial Program which led not only to the award, but also bucked all the way to the Secretary of Defense for consideration of an additional recognition for a job "WELL DONE."

Captain Lucente is a product of Wellesley Schools and also graduated from another Wellesley Institution, Babson College, where he studied business management prior to joining the Navy as a career man.

The Lucente's have roots in Newton and Wellesley and their neighbors in both communities share with them a sense of pride in Bill Lucente.

Playing the tax game to win against the IRS

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Federal income tax has been compared to a board game. Move to one square and pay a fine or penalty; move to another and the IRS pays you a bonus.

The tax law is full of dangerous pitfalls. But it is also awash in tax-saving opportunities — if you are willing to include them in your financial plans.

The tax game is played for keeps, with real money, and most people lose. So consider these facts:

•Despite vast publicity, less then 20 percent of working taxpayers have bothered to establish Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs), the most basic tax planning opportunity available.

•Close to 80 percent of all tax returns filed qualify for refunds. Like many people, you may feel that you have been successful if you receive a refund. What a refund really means, however, is that you have lost track of your tax payments and overpaid the IRS throughout the year.

•More than 40 percent of all taxpayers continue to use one of the short forms (1040A or 1040EZ), resulting in the government earning untold billions in additional tax revenues.

You can avoid tax mistakes with a little self-help tax planning. You may need to count on a tax professional at least once every three years. This is the period covered by the statute of limitations for filing amended returns.

The 1985 tax year has just ended. If you are one of the many who feel you have paid too much in taxes, now is the time to start making sure you don't feel the same way a year from now. Here are a few suggestions that will help you to become a better player at the tax game.

Go over your most recent tax returns. It is important to become thoroughly familiar with the way your financial activity has been reported to the IRS.

Keep a thorough record-keeping system. This is important, not only for owners of small businesses, but also for employees. If you use your car or truck for business, make sure you write down the milage and business purpose everytime you make a business errand. Keep track of income, noting the source of each deposit in your checkbook register.

Don't expect your tax adviser to do it all — he can't remember every detail about your financial picture. It is your job to help your tax adviser. And if you have a complex financial situation, it might be worthwhile to set up appointments in addition to the tax return preparation session. Talk over recent tax developments and how they affect your current tax planning.

Think about the advice you receive. A tax-saving device that works well for one person may not work well for another. For example, most advisers tout the tax advantages of the IRA. But an IRA makes no sense for someone who already has reduced their taxes to a minimum through other credits and deductions.

Timing is important. You cannot expect an adviser, no matter how good, to legally save you tax money after the tax year has ended. And you cannot make last-minute cutting investment moves on Dec. 31. It takes advance planning.

Keep abreast of the current rules affecting your investments. For example, the holding period for capital assets is now six months, but previously was one year. Review Schedule D so that you know the interaction between capital gains and losses.

Develop your own tax deadline calendar so you know throughout the year when you should deal with your tax affairs. The IRS is quite unforgiving when you are a day late or a dollar short. You know that your personal tax return is due April 15. If you pay estimated tax, your four quarterly payments are due April 15, June 15, Sept. 15 and Jan. 15. If you have a home worker for whom you must pay social security taxes, take not when those taxes are due. In operating a small business, there may be payroll taxes to deposit and corporate returns to file. Include on your calendar the state tax filing requirements.

Write a detailed full year tax reduction plan, and review it once each quarter.

Do not put too much stock in the current debate over tax simplification. Too often, proposed tax laws do not get passed. When they do, they frequently are not in the form you expected, or the rules do not go into effect on the dates anticipated.

It takes time to learn about your taxes. Do not sit back and ignore them — that is financial suicide. The more you do to help yourself the better you will play the income tax game, and the lower your tax tab will be next April 15.

Price increases ahead for consumer electronics

By Katsumi Matsubara

NEW YORK (UPI) — The U.S. consumer electronics market, used to falling prices, is likely to see some increases next year.

Spokesmen for most market leaders say they are planning to raise prices for color television sets, videocassette recorders and other consumer electronics to make up for import cost increases resulting from the U.S. dollar's large decline against the Japanese yen.

They see the currency change as an opportunity to halt the devastating price war which has seriously affected their profitability.

Of three U.S. TV and VCR market leaders, Zenith Electronics Co. has announced a plan to raise prices next year.

Spokesman John Taylor said Zenith plans to recommend general price increases for both color TV sets and VCRs with its new product introduction in May in order to cope with the dollar decline and improve profitability hurt by the price war.

General Electric Co. Vice President Jacques Robinson said GE is "in the process of considering" with the same reasons in mind.

"Sooner or later, if we (consumer electronics concerns) don't raise prices, we will be in severe financial difficulties," he said.

Spokesman Charles Smith said RCA is "studying the situation."

Donald Johnstone, president of North American Philips Consumer Electronics Co., a unit of the Netherlands' N.V. Philips, said NAPCE will make its decision by early December to raise prices by "at least a couple of percentage points," effective Jan. 1, 1986.

The dollar's decline against the yen exerts cost pressure on the four non-Japanese firms which import all VCRs and many TV components from Japan.

RCA purchases VCRs from Hitachi Ltd. on an original equipment manufacturing basis, Zenith from Victor Co. of Japan, and GE and NAPCE from Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. GE plans to import TVs as well from Matsushita next year and discontinue production in the United States.

Among Japanese concerns, Sony Corp. of America has specified a price boost of 5 to 12 percent for its electronics products effective in January.

Sony spokesman Tom Sugiyama said the rough range is based on October's dollar exchange rate between 210 and 220 yen and could change depending on the dollar's future moves. The dollar has slipped below 210 yen.

Spokesmen for Matsushita's Panasonic Co. division, Sanyo Electric Inc., Hitachi Sales Corp. of America and Sharp Electronics Corp. said they cannot help raising prices due to the dollar's sharp depreciation against the yen.

Hitachi Sales Corp. of America Vice President Katsumi Onaka said, "at least 5 percent rises may be required," but Toshiba America Inc. President Ryoji Suzuki sounded rather cautious. "We must take into consideration the U.S. market situation as well as the currency change," he said.

The yen's appreciation, coupled with Japan-U.S. trade tensions, could prompt these Japanese firms to increase production in the United States.

The ten firms account for more than 70 percent of the U.S. color TV and VCR markets.

RCA, Zenith, NAPCE and Matsushita are cited as top color TV market leaders by Television Digest, a trade publication, which has estimated their respective market shares at 18, 16.5, 9.7 and 8 percent for the 1985 model year ended last June. NAPCE includes Magnavox, Sylvania and Philco, and Matsushita the Panasonic and Quasar brands.

Top VCR market leaders for calendar 1984 were Matsushita with 19 percent, RCA 16 percent and Sanyo 12.3 percent including both the Sanyo and Fisher brands, according to the trade publication.

While these market leaders expect the price rises to take hold or halt price declines in the retail market, they are concerned over Korean competitors which, the Zenith spokesman said, "have really led the aggressive big price reduction in the industry."

Richard Reister, spokesman for Samsung Electronics America, the largest Korean electronics concern in the United States, said, "We do not expect to have to raise prices next year."

The dollar fluctuations have no effect on the Koreans with their currency basically linked to the dollar.

"If Japanese competitors raise prices, in fact, it will be advantageous" for Samsung, Reister said.

Materials that plug energy leaks

By Karen Caldwell
Copley News Service

If you're expecting a nice, warm winter as a result of equipping your house with insulation, storm windows and a new furnace and thermostat, be prepared for a cold, harsh shock.

Winter winds still can blow through your expensive shelter, chilling your body and costing you money. You'll be losing energy dollars as heated air slides out under doors and spills through tiny chinks in the joints of the house.

Weather strip is one of the best ways to prevent this energy loss, according to Steve Christiani, an assistant manager at a hardware store. To weather-strip, a person applies materials to the sides and insides of doors and windows to create tighter seals with jambs and casings.

"A good job of weatherstripping will keep unconditioned air out and conditioned air in," Christiani said. But beyond that, there are additional advantages. Because weather strip is essentially a seal, it also "reduces the infiltration of dirt, dust, noise and moisture; it absorbs some of the shock to glass when you slam a window or door; it helps keep windows and doors from rattling in high winds, and cuts down on drafts," he said.

A person can tell if his house needs weather strip if he can feel a draft coming through a closed window or door, if he can see light coming in around the door, if there's no strip already in place or if the existing strip is cracked or coming loose, Christiani said.

Weather strip materials are available in kits or can be purchased separately. The materials range from self-adhering strip to tack-up strip, from foam tape to metal tension strips.

Whereas weather strip is used to seal cracks between moving parts like doors and windows, caulking is used to plug unmoveable holes, he said.

In the natural course of things, houses settle, ground shifts, wood warps and temperatures fluctuate. These changes cause building materials to swell and contract. Often, the junctures where different building materials meet change size, crack or disintegrate.

"Like weather strip, caulk is used to plug holes to make a house more wind resistant and to help reduce the infiltration of air, dirt, noise, moisture and incects," Christiani said. But it also offers greater advantages.

Properly applied, caulking is one of the least expensive ways to preserve the structure of a house, he said. Caulking will protect its frame, sheathing and even the paint.

Caulking is available in a variety of forms — cartridges, which generally are used for cracks about ⅛- to ¼-inch wide; tubes of sealant for more narrow cracks; canned caulking or putty for wider cracks; rope or coil caulking for very wide cracks, Christiani said.

Wider VCR choices offered

By the Editors of
Consumers Reports

Owning the first videocassette recorder on your block was quite a status symbol just a few years ago. Nowadays, they're almost as popular as TV sets, and they certainly add versatility to video viewing.

With the increase in popularity, there's also a wider range of VCRs from which to choose. And that could pose a problem for you if you're in the market for a VCR.

Consumer Reports' electronics engineers recently tested 20 VCRs that ranged from relatively low-priced, basic models to high-priced, feature-laden units. They also reviewed the key features available in more than 150 models.

If you want versatility and lots of features, you can expect them from a portable videocassette recorder. They're smaller, lighter and more expensive than the more typical table models. The 11 portables tested by the electronics engineers ranged from $750 to nearly $1,500. Discounts for the portables and for most VCR equipment are usually available.

With portables, the recorder and tuner/timer are typically two separate units. Some are connected by cable. Others snap together using a convenient "docking" or interlocking mechanism.

Together, the sections function like any other VCR. But when you're ready to make your own movies, you just disconnect the recorder, grab the camera and go. (Portable recorders can run on rechargeable batteries or the power from a car's cigarette lighter.)

Among the 11 portable VCRs tested, the RCA VKP950, $1,495, was top-rated and comes with a slew of features.

If you plan to use a VCR mostly for "time-shifting" (recording a program for viewing later) or to watch rented movies, a table model should serve very well. Of the nine table model VCRs tested by Consumer Reports' electronics engineers, some had lots of features; others had only the bare essentials.

Among the deluxe table models tested, the Hitachi VT89A, $995, was highly rated by the engineers. It was one of the easiest VCRs to program.

Of the basic models tested, the RCA VKT275, at about $400, scored well in most of the engineers' tests.

Depth carries South swimmers

The numbers game worked in Newton South's favor on Tuesday, as superior depth helped the Lions to a 92-73 victory over Boston Latin at the Newton North pool.

The Wolfpack jumped out to an early lead by taking first in three of the first four events, but beginning with the diving, the meet belonged to Newton. The Lions won the seven remaining events.

Among the highlights was Steve Goldberg's swim in the breaststroke. The senior captain turned his best time, a 1:10.7, to qualify for the sectionals. Coach Scott Pohlman was also pleased with Matt Capofreddi, who grabbed thirds in the 200 and 500 freestyles.

Doug Karp and Mark Broudy each won two events, as well as swimming on the winning freestyle relay squad.

Monday the Lions lost a close one to Dover-Sherborn, 87-79.

One of the silver linings in the cloud was the performance of diver Amim Ashrafzedeh. Only a freshman, he made six dives for the first time and pulled off a second place.

"He's just learning," said Pohlman, "but he's caught on really well."

Broudy, another freshman, took the only individual firsts for the Lions, with the freestyle relay team also winning.

Friday, Broudy set a personal-best time in the butterfly and the 400 freestyle relay excelled as South dropped a 95-63 meet to Lincoln-Sudbury.

Broudy cut two seconds of his previous best in the fly, then competed in the winning relay with teammates Karp, Goldberg, and Dave Cohen.

The summaries:

Kornitzer scores 5 for Tigers

QUINCY — As long as it was 5-on-5, Quincy was safe from Mike Kornitzer. But in just about every other situation, he was deadly on Saturday, scoring five times in Newton North's 10-2 rout of the Presidents.

Three of those scores came in the final period, as the Tigers blew open a relatively close game with a six-goal outburst in that frame.

In all, the junior scored two goals on the power play, one shorthanded and one on a penalty shot.

For two periods, this one was very close. Though the Tigers held a 4-2 edge at that juncture, North coach Jack Heavey called the scoring chances "just about even."

But when Kornitzer scored on the power play only 40 seconds into the third, "they seemed to die," said Heavey.

Helped by a 13-5 edge in penalties, North was able to play everybody, including both goalies. What pleased Heavey most was his third line getting five goals.

Tim Weaver had a goal and three assists and Greg Burke had two and one, as 11 of the 22 players on the roster had at least a point.

"It was a confidence-builder for all of them," said the coach. "We hadn't scored more than three goals since the third game of the season."

Now 7-2 overall and 2-0 in the Suburban League, North takes on Waltham in a big battle on Wednesday at 8 p.m. at the Watertown Skating Arena.

Cantabs repelled

Goalie Chuck Goldman held the fort long enough for the Newton North offense to do its job, and the Tigers came away with a 4-2 hockey victory over Cambridge Rindge and Latin on Wednesday at the Watertown Skating Arena.

The Warriors, long a cellar-dweller on the ice, may cause some Suburban League rivals problems this winter.

"They're a good team," said North coach Jack Heavey. "They're every bit as good as we are."

But the Tigers had a little bit more in this one, even though Cambridge scored first, on a power-play goal in the second period. Up to that point, the game had belonged to the goalies, with Goldman owning the save of the day on a breakaway.

After the visitors took a 1-0 lead, Newton answered in less than two minutes. Doug Proia picked up Tim Weaver's rebound and ripped home a shot to the glove side.

When DeSimone surprised the Cambridge netminder with a quick slap shot from the circle, it seemed as though the Tigers might be on their way to putting it away. But the Warriors won a faceoff in the North zone with 30 seconds left in the period and put three shots on Goldman before finally beating him to make it 3-2.

North's Doug Proia (in foreground) carries puck as Dave Robinson looks on vs. Malden.

Things got even worse when Dave Robinson picked up his fourth penalty early in the third period, sending him to the showers. That left North with only three defensemen, two of whom had been sick during the week.

Weaver finally eased the pressure five minutes into the frame when he scored on a power play, assisted by Rob Arone and Proia.

"Goldman has kept us in all six of our wins," said Heavey. "He's consistently making 25-30 saves. He's been the difference."

Many of the rest of the players didn't win such high praise: "Our kids can work a lot harder than they worked tonight."

Malden shaded, 2-1

It may have been "the worst game we've played this season," according to Newton North hockey coach Jack Heavey, but it was good enough for a 2-1 win over Malden on Monday at the Watertown Skating Arena.

Neither team looked like the reincarnation of the Montreal Canadiens, but the Tigers had just a little bit more on this night. As has happened several times this season, North can credit the man in the net, Chuck Goldman, with a large part of the success. He missed a shutout by only 44 seconds, and stopped 17 shots.

Steve DeBenedictis was just as sharp at the other end, though beaten twice. He made 25 saves, and quite often didn't get too much help from his defense.

Though not a classic, the game was close enough to be entertaining for the sparse crowd in attendance. The outcome was in doubt until the final seconds, when the Golden Tornadoes pulled their goaltender in a vain attempt to tie it up.

For a while, it looked as though Goldman would have to pitch a shutout for the Tigers to win. After a scoreless first period, North finally beat DeBenedictis at 1:45 of the second period.

Ironically, the goalie had to shoulder some of the blame himself. Greg Burke picked up the puck on Newton's left wing and slid a half-shot, half-pass across in front. From Burke's angle, it probably couldn't have gone in.

As it came into the crease, however, the Malden goalie kicked it out in front instead of steering it back into the corner or behind the net. It just so happened that Rick DeSimone was standing unattended at the goal mouth, and he had the puck back into the net before DeBenedictis even knew he was there.

That's the way the game stayed until Burke notched the gamewinner midway through the third period. But between the two scores, the fans were treated to a fine display of goaltending.

Among the best stops were Goldman denying Scott Sheridan in close and DeBenedictis stopping DeSimone on a near-breakaway. Malden's Peter Giuliano did get one by Goldman, but it clanged off the crossbar.

The Tigers had one more goal in their allotment, and this time there wasn't a thing DeBenedictis could do about it. In a game that featured 54 minutes of penalties, it's fitting that the winner came on the power play.

Malden's Dan Gardner and Newton's Jay Cappello were in the box serving double minors when they were joined by Jim O'Neil of the Golden Tornadoes, giving the Tigers a 4-on-3 edge.

At that point the frustration building up in Malden began to show itself. The Golden Tornadoes, 0-4 coming into the game, had seemingly seen a winnable game get away.

In the last seven minutes of the game, Malden accumulated 22½ minutes of penalties and had two players ejected. One of them picked up an extra game misconduct for offering his opinion of the call.

Newton managed to wind up with an 18-minute advantage in penalty minutes, but much of that was just on paper, as it included 15 minutes worth of game misconducts to players who were already gone.

One of the reasons Heavey was so unhappy after the game is that his players usually insisted upon retaliation instead of taking the man advantage.

Despite, or maybe because of, all the chippiness, the Tornadoes managed to give the Tigers some awfully nervous moments.

With only 44 seconds left, Malden finally managed to beat Goldman. He stopped Sheridan, and he stopped Gardner, but when Bob Murray picked up the rebound again in front, there wasn't much Goldman could do but watch.

"We just weren't ready to play," said Heavey of his club's slow start. "Their goalie was great."

The Tigers were missing defenseman Dave O'Connor, who was out sick, and rotated the other three regulars. Heavey also spotted Dom Bianchi and was very pleased with the way he responded.

Greenbaum ignites Squirts

Michael Greenbaum struck for the winning goal to give the Newton Squirt A (Orange team) an uphill 4-3 victory over North Andover in the Acton-Boxboro Invitational Hockey Tournament. The Newton six was eliminated from the tourney the following day by Casco Bay, Maine.

The Newton Squirts rallied from a 3-1 deficit in the third period to force North Andover into overtime. Andrew Ingham scored at the 8:12 mark, assisted by David Stewart and Josh Sullivan, and Greenbaum knotted the cout with 30 seconds remaining with the Newton goalie, Peter Cook, sitting on the bench for a sixth skater.

Greenbaum tallied the clincher with two minutes gone by in the extra stanza, being set up by linemates Kenny Walsh and Keith Gessen.

Stellar defensive play by Steve Hankin, Nathan Martinez and Robbie Uttaro repulsed North Andover in the overtime period.

New Woodland pro Ted Griffin

By TOM MURPHY
Senior Editor

Chasing all those pots of gold on the PGA Tour can be a lure a few young talents in the game can resist. It takes a lot of truthful analysis to do so at an early age, which is precisely what Ted Griffin, the new professional at Woodland Golf Club in Auburndale, did for himself.

Griffin, who was top assistant to Ed Whalley for the past three years, has just chosen to take over Woodland pro duties. He is only a few months short of his 30th birthday. At 21, he was the youngest club pro in New England at Halifax C.C., possibly the Youngest club pro in the USA.

He got hooked by the game as a high school freshman, using birthday gift 5 and 9 irons in a field and on a driving range. By his soph year, he was in the low 70's and 80's. Captain of the Halifax H.S. team as a junior, with a handicap of 3, he competed strongly in schoolboy and junior tournaments.

Northeastern followed graduation, but he found hours of classroom study couldn't match the lure of golf. Money saved for education took him to Florida, where he involved himself in mini-tour play in the Tampa area. He declared himself a professional to get in on the prize money. A few second and third finishers were good for pocket change, he recalls.

Back home, Ted took an assistant's job at Hillview C.C. in Reading and and a rewarding season with pro Bob Baldassari and later wintered in orlando. This time, he did well enough on the mini-tour to make expenses, eating every day, he says.

Critical self-analysis took place about then. He was seeing some of the finest coming shotmakers in the nation. His judgment: "For me to be a player of any calibre to compete with these other fellows, I just couldn't do it. If I was going to have any future in golf, its was going to be at a private club as a professional and not competitng in tournaments for money. I love golf. What impressed me about the game was that I met so many friendly people I had found just what I wanted to do the rest of my life."

Coincidentally, the Halifax opportunity came under a lease operation. He was the become acquainted with merchandising, record keeping and teaching. Wintertime found him back in Orlando for a continuing program that involved teaching workshops, the PGA business school and mini-tour action. Andy North, later U.S. OPen champ, and Gary Hallberg were among the budding stars he played with.

One of the PGA workshops was conducted by Bob Toski and the well known South Carolina teacher, Pat Bertholy. First Griffin exposure to Toski was interesting.

"On my first night I went over to Buena Vista to play 9 holes and hit some balls," Ted remembers. "While at the range this person drove by me in a golf cart, stopped and watched me a few minutes. Then he offered suggestions on how to correct something I was doing wrong. Not until the next day at the work shop did I discover that it was Bob Toski who had been talking to me.

"It ended with him picking me out of the class of 40 guys as the demonstration pupil. Not only did I learn how to play the game better myself, but how to use what knowledge I acquired in teaching others."

Harvey Pennick, famed as Ben Crenshaw's teacher, was a dry, down-home Texas type Ted enjoyed meeting. But a later trip to Philadelphia with home area star player friends, Kevin Klier and David O'Kelley, saw him meet another fine teacher. He was Gary Harden, son of Temple's football coach, whose lessons came across better than anything yet experienced, including those of Bob Toski.

The Woodland opportunity as assistant came through another fine golfing pal in southeastern Massachusetts, Ted O'Rourke, who told him he was leaving the club to go to Winchester. That led to a luncheon date with Ed Whalley, a conference which saw him installed in the Woodland shop in April, 1982.

Ted has high praise and affection for Ed. "He has been very fine to me as a personal friend and I have a lot of respect for him in the golf business. I picked up many interesting merchandising ideas from him. He's a very good teacher, of course, and I benefited greatly from his advice in that area of the game."

Thus was Paul Edward Griffin Jr. well versed when the Woodland choice came. Ted became a Class A PGA official in May of 1985, having obtained full accreditation from the New England branch with a commendation for his excellence in oral and written examination.

North shuts down Raiders

Lion cagers trample Bedford

Newton South had little trouble disposing of hapless Bedford, 79-49, at the Newton South gym on Friday in a Dual County League contest.

The Lions could do little wrong against the Buccaneers, who are struggling this season. South his 34-of-66 (51 percent) from the floor and piled up 15 steals. T.J. Rohn and Rowen Henry each had five, with Pillan Thirumalaisamy adding four.

Thirumalaisamy, the senior off-guard, also sparked the Lions in the only period that really meant much. He tallied eight of his 12 points in the first frame, when the Lions ran out to an 11-point lead. The Bucs never threatened after that.

Tigers triumph

A strong defensive first half propelled the Newton North Tigers past North Quincy, 60-35, in a Suburban League basketball game held at the Newton North gym Tuesday.

Newton North held the Red Raiders to single-figure scoring in both the first and second quarters to take a 27-16 lead at intermission, and according to Tiger Coach Jerry Phillips, North Quincy could have been down for the count.

"We started off a little slow," Phillips said of Newton's 12-point first period. "We missed some shots. In the second period we added a little more offense and the defense did a super job."

Phillips said a total-team effort on defense was the key to the victory. Playing both a zone and a man-to-man, Phillips said "everybody was helping eachother and we mixed it up pretty good."

The Tigers jumped back a step in the third frame, committing seven turnovers, but picked up the pace in the final frame. With a 39-27 advantage after three, Newton North buried the Raiders with a 22-8 scoring edge in the fourth.

"With about six minutes to go it looked like we were too hot to stop," Phillips said.

Andy Lockwood led all scorers with 19 points and was the only Tiger in double figures. Nine other Newton North players contributed to the balanced scoring attack.

Lockwood also pulled down eight rebounds while Drew Dixon added five. Britt Ryan contributed with three assists and seven steals.

South cruises

Another strong defensive performance by Newton South helped the Lions to an 80-70 Dual County League victory over Concord-Carlisle at South.

Though the score doesn't make it seem that way, the Lions hit the visiting Patriots with a tough defense right away, led by a strong first-quarter performance by Rowen Henry. The senior forward scored five points and led the defensive charge in the first period as the Lions pulled out to a 20-17 lead.

Center Reggie Stewart took over to hit four shots in a row as South continued to pull away. Stewart had "his best game of the season," according to Coach Joe Killilea. In addition to his team-high 18 points, the junior center had five rebounds, two blocked shots and two steals.

By the half it was 42-31 and the Lions continued to pull away by scoring 30 points in the third quarter. Stewart and Alex Levine each had eight.

The lead got up to 22 at one point, but the Pats "never gave up," said Killilea, and kept trying to close the gap, cutting it to eight at one point.

The South coach praised guards Pillan Thirumalaisamy and Randy Collins, who controlled the tempo and combined for 30 points.

Junior John Mee, a 6-4 forward, led C-C with 22 points.

The summary:

NEWTON SOUTH(79)-Thirumalaisamy 6-0-12, Collins 4-0-8, Henry 3-0-6, Stewart 3-0-6, Mercer 4-0-8, Levine 4-2-10, Rohn 4-2-10, Grossman 2-0-4, Marion 1-7-9, Ollivierre 1-0-2, Tyler 2-0-4. Tot. 34-11-79.

Newton Catholic fights back for two victories

Newton Catholic stayed on a strong streak with Catholic Suburban League wins over Hudson Catholic on Sunday and Mission on Friday.

Sunday's contest was a 51-43 come-from-behind affair. Despite the win, Coach Don Dabenigno wasn't particularly pleased.

"We weren't ready to play," he said.

After trailing by two at the half, the Lancers were up by one going into the final period. Hudson stayed close almost the entire way, as it wasn't sealed until Mike Donnellan sank a couple of crucial free throws late in the game.

Other than Donnellan, the Lancers had trouble at the line in the final period, which is why Hudson stayed close. Newton hit 7-of-14 from the stripe in the last quarter.

The Lancers forced Hudson into some mistakes in the third period, which turned the game around.

Dabenigno credited Hudson with slowing the game down, throwing off the Lancers. He pointed out that his club got off only 44 shots, 20 below its average.

Jeff Sherman hit eight of his 19 points in the first period to keep the Lancers in the game early. He pulled down 14 rebounds in the contest.

Forward Kevin Walsh also played well, with 10 points, four assists and three steals.

Friday the Lancers got by Mission, 55-52, as Donnellan again rippled through two clutch free throws.

Newton was down by a point with a minute and a half to go before Sherman's (23 points, 14 rebounds) power move made it 51-50 in his club's favor. Donnellan's free throws gave the Lancers a three-point bulge, but it wasn't until Frank Battista hit two more with 21 seconds left that the decision was sealed.

In between, Leon Graves had hit a bucket to cut it back to one. The Mission center gave NC trouble all night, scoring 30 points.

The Lancers shot poorly again, hitting only 16-of-48 from the floor, despite taking only five shots from outside the paint. Newton went 23-of-40 from the line.

Now 7-1 overall and 4-1 in the Catholic Suburban League, are at St. Patrick's on Wednesday for a 7:30 p.m. game.

Silverman spurs Beaver

Beaver Country Day defeated Concord Academy, 57-37, Friday at Chestnut Hill. Steven Silverman, senior guard from West Roxbury, was high scorer with 16 points and a school-record 10 steals. He was returning to action after missing three games because of an ankle injury.

Senior forward Steve Reynolds of Dedham tallied 13 points, had 11 rebound and blocked four shots. Beaver has a 5-1 record overall.

The summaries:

Matthew Sotir

Tackle Sotir wins Fraser Award at Colby College

WATERVILLE, ME. — The 1985 Paul "Ginger" Fraser Award was assigned to defensive tackle Matthew Sotir of Newton at the announcement of post season football honors at Colby College recently. Sotir is a freshman.

The Fraser Award, named after the 1915 Colby graduate, goes to a non-letter winner who has demonstrated a positive attitude and contributed significantly to his team's efforts towards excellence.

"It was difficult to choose the Fraser recpient," says assistant coach Scott Laughinghouse, "because there are so many deserving players. But Sotir was especially well known for his continual effort to improve himself and the teammate across from him in practice."

Evening recreation program underway

NEWTON — The Newton Parks and Recreation Department is sponsoring an evening recreation program at the Solomon Schechter School Gym, 60 Stein Circle, Newton Centre. The program operates on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings from 7 to 9 p.m.

The schedule of activities is as follows: Monday: adult (16 and over) basketball; Tuesday: junior/senior high basketball; and Wednesday: junior/senior high floor hockey.

Newton North girls roll to 7th victory

What else but defense? Newton North pressed from start to finish on the way to escaping North Quincy with its seventh win in as many tries, this one, 53-40, on Tuesday.

The Tigers not only shut down the Red Raiders' big girl, but nullified a hot-shooting forward and an outside threat also. Again, it was Newton North's "incredible" defense that had won the game.

Carol Ventura and Carolyn Natale combined to bury 6-0 Irene Warren, holding the North Quincy threat to just 10 points. In their spare time, Natale and Ventura put the cold hand on Ann Marie Hughes, and outside shooter who managed just six points.

Ann Meng singlehandedly thwarted Karen Runge, a scoring threat, and held her to six points.

Ventura boosted the Tigers to a 17-6 first-quarter advantage, scoring six points early. Despite sitting out most of the third quarter because of foul trouble, Ventura still scored a game-high 23 points.

North Quincy closed a 25-18 halftime deficit to five, 35-30, in the third quarter, but Newton North turned on the press and ran the score right back up.

Tiger Coach Irene Cucina cited the play of Meng, who played an "incredible" game. Lisa Kazarosian played well off the bench for Newton North.

Antonellis pops 20

Katrina Antonellis punched home a game-high 20 points but it was not quite enough for Newton South as host Bedford slipped away with a second-half surge, 42-32, Friday.

South trailed by four at the half, 20-16, and kept it close throughout the third quarter. Going into the final frame, Newton trailed 30-26.

Kerry McGovern turned the game around for Bedford with two minutes gone in the fourth. The All-Scholastic intercepted a Newton South pass and converted the layup, only to be fouled. McGovern sunk the free throw also to put Bedford up by seven.

South Coach Mark Aronson said that, despite the loss, he was pleased with the way the Lions played.

Lancers fall short

A fourth-quarter surge was not quite enough as Newton Catholic dropped a 44-29 decision to host Sacred Heart of Weymouth.

The Lancers trailed, 41-18, entering the final quarter but outscored the opponents 11-3 in the fourth.

Cheryl Chagnon (nine points) and Michelle Cedrone (eight points) led Newton Catholic. Maura Prince sparked the offense with a half-dozen offensive rebounds. Eleven steals in the fourth quarter helped too.

Off the bench, Angela Canty scored five points for Newton Catholic.

The Lancers, 0-6, will host St. Columbkille on Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

The summaries:

BEDFORD(42)-Dugherty 8-2-18, Alcadie 2-0-4, Kerry McGovern 6-3-15, Maxon 0-2-2, Dyson 1-1-3. Tot. 17-7-42.

NEWTON SOUTH(32)-Antonellis 8-4-20, Williams 4-0-8, Hill 2-0-4, Wilson 0-0-0, Lerman 0-0-0. Tot. 14-4-32.

Troiano sets IM record

NORTH QUINCY — Swimmers don't normally sweat much while underwater, but try telling that to the teams from Newton North and North Quincy.

Thursday, both clubs had reason to perspire as the decision of the meet hinged on the final three events. Visiting Newton North pulled it out in the clutch, drying off with an 89-82 victory to remain undefeated.

The senior co-captain snapped Kenny Goulston's school record by just more than a second, winning the race with a 2:19.04 finish.

"An excellent performance," Newton North Coach Chris Jones said of Troiano's feat. "These kind of things (records) are pretty important to us."

Troiano snaps the old mark of 2:02.2 set by Goulston, who is gone for the season because of an injury suffered outside of school.

Newton North had a hold of the meet midway through, leading, 34-28, going into the diving competition. A one-two finish by North Quincy though, cut the Tiger lead to one, 39-38, and Newton North would not breathe easy until the after backstroke.

Leading 64-61 entering the backstroke, the Tigers cushioned the slim lead with a strong showing. Scott Anderson copped first for Newton North, and combined with a third-place finish by Tiger Randy Johnson, North Quincy had its back against the wall, trailing 74-67 with two events remaining.

Newton North all but eliminated the Red Raiders with an even stronger performance in the breaststroke, winning first, third, and fourth place to take an 85-72 lead.

Mike Yin of Newton North nipped North Quincy's Jason Moriarty for the top spot in the breastsroke, winning by 16-hundredths of a second. Mark Chao followed for Newton in third, and Robert Greene was fourth.

Weight course is set to begin

NEWTON — The Newton Health Department will offer a weekly weight-reduction support program Thursday evenings starting Jan. 16. The eight consecutive weekly meetings will be held at the Newton Senior Center, 345 Walnut St., Newtonville (basement of the Newtonville Library).

Confidential weigh-ins will begin at 5:30 p.m. and the discussion hour, led by public health nurses, will run from 6 to 7 p.m.

Sessions will include nutritional information, behavior modification principles and exercise theory. The core of the program will be group discussion focusing on participant's ongoing efforts to control their weight.

Registration will be held at the first session and attendance at all sessions is encouraged.

Lion girl gymnasts lose

Senior Leora Bloch picked up a victory in the floor exercise and captured second on the balance beam in a 92.2 to 72.75 Newton South loss to Brookline.

Bloch scored a 6.15 on the floor and turned in a 6.6 performance on the beam to lead the South gymnasts.

Freshman Maura Raider was South's other scorer with a second-place finish on the vault. Her score of 7.35 was just a point shy of first place.

Kennedy said she added three new routines to the lineup, giving her more balance as far as scoring is concerned. The Lions scored almost 17 more points than they did in the season opener, a 90.95 to 56.25 loss to Westford Academy on Friday.

Bloch turned in a strong performance on the balance beam Friday, scoring a 6.4, which, according to Kennedy, "was one of her best routines."

Raider took third on the vault with a 7.65 and Hackel placed third in the floor exercise with a 4.15.

New head at NeWell

NEWTON — The Board of Trustees of NeWell Home Health Services, formerly the Newton-Wellesley-Weston Visiting Nurse Association, has elected Philip Baird of Newton as President of the Board. Baird succeeds Rita Blakeney of Newton who served the board as president for three years. Mrs. Blakeney will remain on the board.

Mr. Baird has been a member of the board for five years and most recently served as Vice President. Under Mrs. Blakeney and Mr. Baird's leadership, the 87-year-old nursing agency affiliated last year with Newton-Wellesley Hospital. The purpose of the affiliation was to insure a greater continuity of care to patients returning home from the hospital.

A 35-year resident of Newton, Baird is a retired airport planning engineer for the Federal Aviation Administration. He and his wife Vivian are active members of the community. Baird is a Senior Warden of St. Paul's Episcopal Church of Newton and Baird has been a member of the Newton-Wellesley Hospital Aid Association for 24 years.

Also elected to the Board of Trustees of NeWell Home Health Services as Vice President, Kenneth Bordewieck of Needham; as Secretary, Arthur Baldwin, M.D. of Needham; as Corresponding Secretary, Barbara Hewitt of Newton Highlands; and as Treasurer, Susan Carpenter of Wellesley.

Air rights forum set

NEWTON — The Ward 2 Democratic Committee has invited Glenn Morris to present his plan for development of the air rights over the Massachusetts Turnpike in Newton, and to provide a forum for discussion of legality and feasibility of such a plan.

Residents are invited to the Jan. 16 meeting at 8 p.m. Proponents of both sides of the issue are welcome.

The meeting will take place at the Central Congregational Church, 218 Walnut St., Newtonville. For more information, call Martina Jackson, ward chair, at 964-06318.

Explorers plan banquet

NEWTON — The 11th annual Norumbega Council Explorers held their Recognition Banquet at the Newton Marriott Hotel on Sunday evening, Jan. 12.

Charles Englert, Marriott catering manager and fourth-year advisor of the Post, along with Associate Advisor Michael Kearney, an 11-year Post veteran, and Steve Fogel, catering manager at Marriott, with former Post members Chris Love and Al DePaola as rookie advisors, worked closely with the Explorers in planning the restaurant management Post's super event of the year.

The purpose of the dinner was to provide vocational training for the participating post members from local high schools in Newton, Wellesley and Weston, to recognize the many young leaders in Explorers, as well as the contributions of adults to the program.

These young adults were responsible for all facets of the event, including planning the menu, selling the tickets and promoting the event. They also assisted in food preparation, setting the room for the banquet and serving the meals. They all are interested in pursuing careers in the restaurant and hospitality industry.

Senior menus

NEWTON — West Suburban Elder Services, Inc. in cooperation with the Council on Aging, administers nutrition sites at the Newton Senior Center (552-7178), the Newton Corner Senior Drop-In Center (969-8030), the Nonantum Multi-Service Center (965-6390) and a kosher nutrition site at Congregation Beth El-Atereth Israel (244-7233) for persons 60 and older. Meals are served at noon. Reservations for lunch should be made at least 24 hours in advance by calling the desired location. Also, a light Thursday evening supper is provided at the Newton Senior Center. There is no charge for meals but a 75-cent donation is requested. Museums are 'fun'

By The Associated Press

Maren Brown believes that "museums are really a fun place to be" and she and the rest of the staff at the museums on the Quadrangle in Springfield are working to see that they are more fun for families.

Braced with a $39,000 grant, the Museum of Fine Arts and the George Walter Vincent Smith Art Museum have set up a program that brings actors, mimes, craftsmen, artists and other entertianers to the museums every Sunday afternoon through June.

"We're trying to make the art museums more accessible to the public and less intimidating," Brown says. "I'm designing programs that will appeal to all ages. We're not setting a certain place aside for children."

A survey taken a few years ago showed that families are not regular museum visitors and the Sunday program is an attempt, says museum spokeswomen Amy S. Dane, "to get a new audience, the family as a unit."

This Sunday, artist Susan Schwalb will draw with silver and create glass and wire objects. The following two Sundays Jeanne Fontaine and Karen Frickenhaus will spin and weave raw wool and on Feb. 9, actors will portray famous characters from some of the paintings in the museum's collections. Visitors are urged to join in.

The Sunday programs run from 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. and are free. Call 413-739-3871 for further information and schedules.

Some other calendar notes...

FURNITURE

Tables, chairs, lamps, shelves and other small pieces of furniture handcrafted by 21 New England artists-craftsmen from wood, metal, plastic and cloth are on display at Clark Gallery in Lincoln, Mass., through Feb. 1. The gallery is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. Call 617-259-8303.

BACK TO THE '50s

With the cost of a day's skiing becoming more and more precious, Sugarloaf Mountain's 35th anniversary celebration comes just in time, with the price of lift tickets, equipment rentals and lessons being rolled back to $5 a day each from Jan. 27 to Jan. 31. The reduced rates for the White White World Week is only part of the celebration — there will be special races, snow sculptures, entertainment, theme parties and on Feb. 1, a fireworks display described as the largest ever in Maine. More information at 207-237-2000.

BIRTHDAY

You'd hardly find the Rhode Island-Massachusetts Coasts School in art history books, but curator Robert Workman of the Rhode Island School of Design says that "in the 1860s and 1870s, we were — along with the Massachusetts coast — one of the major subjects in American painting, right up there with the Hudson River." A number of paintings by 19th century painters of the Rhode Island landscape go on display on Jan. 24 as part of the state's 350th birthday festivities. "There are some native sons included (in the show)," writes Providence Journal-Bulletin arts writer Channing Gray, "but most of the canvases are by major landscape painters drawn to Rhode Island for its pristine shoreline and comfortable accessibility." The museum is open Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday 10:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., Thursday noon to 8 p.m. and Sunday 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is $1 and less. Call 401-331-3511.

SPOOFING

"Forbidden Broadway," a cabaret musical that takes a less-than-charitable look at some of Broadway's landmarks and personalities, is becoming a fixture on the Boston night entertainment scene. With over 500 performances under its belt in the past year or so at the Terrace Room of Boston's Park Plaza Hotel, the hit musical comedy revue is being updated with new parodies, including Richard Harris in "Camelot," Anthony Quinn in "Zorba," Mickey Rooney, Ann Miller and Angela Lansbury, while retaining some of the original favorites — "Evita," "Cats," "La Cage Aux Folles," and Carol Channing. Now in preview, the 1986 version opens on Jan. 23 at 7:30 p.m.

Tickets are $19 for Friday and Saturday performances, less at other times. Call 617-357-8384.

PROPS

The historical development of propellers from the first powered flights of the early 1900s through World War II is the theme of an exhibit "Pioneering the Propeller" that is on display through March at the New England Air Museum next to Bradley International Airport in Windsor Locks, Conn. Daily 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admnission is $4.50, $2 for children. Call 203-623-3305.

New opportunities are closer than you think

Announcing our new Salary Program

Approximately 5 miles from Boston and Braintree, there's a company offering new opportunities for you. It's Boston Financial Data Services, located in North Quincy. As an established leader in the mutual funds servicing industry, BFDS can offer you competitive salaries, advancement opportunities and commuting convenience you won't find elsewhere.

Our Salary Program has raised our salaries making them among the most competitive in Greater Boston. Our advancement Programs let you achieve your full potential rapidly. They include on-the-job training, job specific programs, personal skills development seminars and special industry training programs. All in addition to our 100% tuition reimbursement program. Our location is just minutes from the Red Line's North Quincy stop. By car, we are right off Rte. 93 (Southeast Expressway) with plenty of free parking. Right now, we're offering these excellent opportunities to join us:

Data Entry Clerks

In this position, you'll be responsible for processing and updating shareholder accounts. We'll provide complete CRT training to qualified applicants. However, we do require 35-40 wpm typing skills, an aptitude for numbers and attention to details.

Control Clerks

Your responsibilities will include posting, balancing and researching fund account activity on a timely basis. This is a key position in a very active area. It requires a highly motivated individual with strong math skills.

Telephone Inquiry Specialists and Correspondents

These are challenging opportunities involving heavy phone and written contact with shareholders, brokers and funds. You'll also be responsible for the timely processing of telephone trades and some clerical duties. This position requires strong interpersonal, written and oral communication skills. We prefer applicants with at least 2 years of college and some related experience.

Transaction Processors

You'll be responsible for processing mail and shareholder accounts. We're looking for responsible detail-oriented individuals to fill full and part time shifts. Part time hours are 5 am to 9 am.

Proof and Transit Operators

Qualified applicants will have encoding experience, 10-key or key punch experience also acceptable. Full time hours are 8 am - 6:45 pm on a rotating schedule. Variable 4 and 5-day workweeks, including some Saturdays, with 3 and 4-day breaks.

If you would like to learn more about new opportunities with BFDS, please forward your resume to: BFDS, Human Resources Dept., State Street South Complex, 2 Heritage Drive, North Quincy MA 02171, or call (617) 328-6666.

Connelly Pontiac on Rte. 1 in Norwood recently installed the state's first Kontax II computer system, a Pennzoil product. The decision to choose Kontax II was made by dealership owner Tom Connelly, who cited the system's unique ability to compile accurate, individual records of vehicle maintenance as the primary reason for computerizing his service department. The new system will eliminate the yellowing work invoices and illegible service logs that are the hallmark of most service departments.

According to Service Director Tony Camarra, the system takes the guesswork out of maintenance-scheduling. "We can access a customer's records in a matter of seconds," he said. "The system recommends current maintenance items to be performed on a customer's vehicle without over-selling because the computer knows what has been done and what items are due, based on the vehicle mileage since the last maintenance visit."

Connelly Pontiac has converted nearly all of its customer records to the new system which is suitable for both new and used vehicles. Each time a vehicle is serviced, a legible record is added to its computerized file. If service is performed elsewhere, the customer has only to inform Connelly Pontiac and the information will be entered as part of the vehicle's history. The Kontax II will provide an accurate, up-to-date record that can be transferred to a new owner when the vehicle is sold.

Because factory recommendations for the proper maintenance of various models are automatically programmed into the computer, the system is capable of scheduling mail-out service reminders based on mileage and/or time elapsed since the last maintenance visit.

Mr. Connelly celebrated opening day of the Kontax II system by hosting a luncheon for all his employees to acquaint them with the new system, which, although used primarily by the Service Department, will assist the workings of all departments. Guest speakers included Thomas Kennedy, Pennzoil's Boston Branch Manager, and Glenn Dracopoulas, local Sales Representative for Pennzoil. The speakers pointed out that this is Pennzoil's first Kontax II installation in Massachusetts and how important it is to them to have this first system operating in a dealership that is as well-respected throughout the industry as Connelly Pontiac.

Tim Coogan vs. the GBPC

Dismissal request denied

By Ed Cafasso, Staff Writer

NEWTON - A state Appeals Court justice has struck down former Greater Boston Police Council (GBPC) Timothy C. Coogan's second attempt to dismiss the multi-million dollar civil suit against him.

Justice Rudolph Kass has upheld a Middlesex Superior Court judge's decision not to throw out the GBPC complaint charging Coogan with fraud, conflict of interest, breach of contract and breach of fiduciary duty.

Coogan, a 38-year-old Sudbury resident, had asked for a single justice to dismiss the lawsuit, but Kass denied his petition without a hearing.

"The petition, in effect, asks a final disposition on the merits by the single justice, an order I deem inappropriate," Kass wrote.

Coogan had been seeking immediate relief from Kass, but the latest setback does not end his chances for a successful appeal.

If he chooses to pursue the petition, all 10 of the justices who comprise the Appeals Court will be forced to issue a final ruling on the matter.

Meanwhile, Coogan's attorney, Kenneth A. Pollenz, last week took depositions from seven individuals involved in the case, including Needham Police Chief Louis Roman and Norwood Police Chief George DiBlasi.

Roman and DiBlasi are executive members of the GBPC, a voluntary association of more than 50 law enforcement agencies in eastern Massachusetts.

The communities of Newton, Watertown, Walpole, Brookline, Beverly, Marblehead and Lynn are sponsoring the suit against Coogan for his role in a scheme that diverted nearly $1.6 million in public funds into a secret bank account from 1982 to 1985.

Using information uncovered by the Internal Revenue Service, a federal grand jury has also begun to probe the GBPC's finances.

Superior Court Judge Charles M. Grabau turned down Coogan's first attempt to dismiss the suit during initial hearings in December.

Coogan appealed Grabau's decision on Jan. 3, only to have Kass shelve the effort three days later.

In his petition to Kass, Pollenz said, "The Greater Boston Police Council is not a real party in interest and lacks the capacity to sue with respect to the allegations and claims asserted in the complaint."

The "threshold issue" in the case is the GBPC's lack of legal identity, said Pollenz, who claims the association has made "no showing of substantial organization and structure" like the charters or by-laws used to define fraternal orders or labor unions.

Thanks, praises on a special day

By Les Orsini, Staff Writer

NEWTON — It wasn't until the day Martin Luther King died that Alfred Smith, president of Black Citizens of Newton, learned the civil rights leader's message of nonviolence.

Smith told the story of his personal transformation Monday to more than 200 residents gathered at the Myrtle Baptist Church to celebrate Martin Luther King Day.

The racially-mixed audience participated in a service including the gospel songs of The Fifth Sunday Singers, poems commemorating King written by four Ward School elementary students, and the wisdom of six speakers.

King's credo of nonviolence was the theme most often stressed.

"Being young and robust, I did not understand the issue of nonviolence," Smith said of himself in the 1950s and 1960s.

But on April 4, 1968 — the day King was assassinated — Smith and other Roxbury community leaders began a five-day struggle to stop black outrage from erupting into violence.

Blacks were threatening to destroy the Campbell School, but leaders prevented that from happening. The facility was later renamed the King School, Smith said.

> 'All of those who rose and spoke against him, I ask the question, 'Where are they now?"
> Dr. Edward Whitaker

"The violence would have spread from the city to the suburbs," Smith said, "but it was contained."

Smith said he first understood the evil of race hatred — "the sordid side of America" — only after participating in such protests as a sitdown strike and a march on Washington.

So frustrated was he by racial injustice that when he met King in 1966 Smith could ask the civil rights leader only how he could stand being so nonviolent.

Back in the 1960s, many blacks found it difficult to

Deputy DPW head resigns

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Anthony Scalese has resigned the post of deputy commissioner for the Department of Public Works (DPW) amid growing criticism from employees and elected officials.

> 'Anything inefficient or having even the perception of not being proper won't be tolerated by me.'
> DPW Commissioner James Hickey.

The resignation came last week following charges from two aldermen that Scalese had directed DPW employees to construct a sidewalk outside his home in violation of department policy. It came in the wake of criticism levelled at Scalese for an allegedly derogatory comment he made about the Nonantum section of the city during a recent meeting with aldermen.

Scalese denied the sidewalk related charges Friday night, saying he voluntarily resigned because his efforts to improve DPW employee productivity were being undermined by some workers and aldermen.

Earlier, DPW Commissioner James L. Hickey explained the sidewalk issue boils down to the difference between an "installation" of a new sidewalk and the "repair" of an existing one.

"From my perspective, it was more than a repair," said Hickey.

Under existing policy, the city will not repair a sidewalk unless a homeowner has paid for an "improved betterment," or the installation of a walkway made of approved materials, Hickey said. Residents and the city split the cost of an improved betterment evenly, Hickey said.

Once a resident pays for the betterment, the city assumes responsibility for repairs and their cost forever, said Hickey.

"He made an error in judgment in paving the sidewalk in front of his property," said Hickey. "The error in judgment was in good faith."

Last Friday, city workers removed the asphalt sidewalk and covered the area with gravel, the usual procedure for repairing damaged oil-penetration walkways when a homeowner

Air rights plan aimed at two villages

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Air rights development over the Massachusetts Turnpike should be limited to Newton Corner and Newtonville, according to a report unveiled at last week's Ward 2 Democratic Committee meeting.

Urban Design and Beautification Commission (UDBC) Chairman Glenn Morris presented the draft report proposing limitations for development along the "spine" — the Newton section of the turnpike stretching from Newton Corner to the Charles River in Auburndale.

The report's goal, according to Morris, is to ensure that any development over and along the turnpike conforms to the characteristics of the surrounding neighborhoods. In addition, Morris pointed to the Copley Place and John Hancock Garage developments in Boston as an example of how much influence state agencies like the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority (MTA) have when they really want something done.

"I think it is important that we have some kind of plan to limit the development," he said, "because when the stakes are high enough, the MTA has a lot of power in the decision-making process."

Morris, an architect, said he is trying to map out a plan that would concentrate commercial development in the four village centers adjacent to the roadway.

The UDBC chairman said he envisions the future of the Garden City as a cohesive municipality connected by walkways and businesses over the highway currently dividing it. To that end, he suggested complexes in Newton Corner and Newtonville that would meet those objectives while taking into account the surrounding neighborhoods.

The draft report calls for the heaviest air rights development to be centered in Newton Corner. The UDBC draft report calls for 100,000 to 125,000 square feet of retail space, 150,000 square feet of office space, a commuter rail station under the Gateway Center and "a limited" expansion of the existing hotel over the roadway.

Where kids grow up afraid for their lives

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

QIRYAT SHEMONA — Like any place in the world, the dark can be a frightening place for the children of this town on the Israel-Lebanon border. Instead of ghosts and goblins, though, it is the shrill whistle of Katushya rockets from across the Golan Heights that keeps them up at night.

> 'Everywhere we go at night, we run. If we go to the movies, we run to them and run back home.'
> Itzak Ben-Avi

"Sometimes, I can't sleep at night," 12-year-old Itzak Ben-Avi says. "We have to go to the shelters. I am always scared to go to sleep because of the Katushyas. I want it to stop. I want to live in peace."

In the daylight, Qiryat Shemona seems peaceful enough. Nestled between mountains towering over it that offer a breath taking view, this community of 17,000 is a busy place. In the valley, stretching eastward toward the Syrian border less than five miles away, farmers ply the land, reaping fruit from what was once a barren desert. In the center of town, there are shops selling everything from sundials to the latest in video equipment; movie theaters, a hotel and a bus station. Qiryat Shemona, is in many respects, like any small town in the United States.

Ozawa gives local musicians a treat

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — For many Newton Symphony Orchestra (NSO) members, his presence is a once-in-a-lifetime, amateur musician's dream.

For about an hour Sunday afternoon, Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Conductor Seiji Ozawa gives the local musicians a taste of his subtle though intense direction.

They are rehearsing Beethoven's Egmost Overture in preparation for NSO's concert that evening at Aquinas Junior College. Ozawa is to be guest conductor for the Egmont Overture — one of the three pieces scheduled — in honor of the orchestra's 20th season.

Ozawa shows little effect of a six-week bout with bronchitis that has forced him to cancel all appearances until Sunday's NSO concert.

The orchestra applauds as Ozawa — looking like an on-duty physician in his white cotton pullover shirt, white pants and white loafers — mounts the podium.

For more than a half hour, the BSO conductor breaks the Egmont into parts to perfect each.

"Take almost a breath with me so you don't have any doubt where to come in," he says at one point. "Exactly right," he adds a second later as musicians resume playing.

The NSO relaxes for a moment after each part has been fine-tuned, but when the BSO maestro asks them to put the Egmont together, the musicians spring forward instantly, poised to begin.

When they stumble briefly, Ozawa takes the blame himself, saying he is out of practice because of his illness. "I lost my time," he says, drawing laughter from the NSO.

If his timing is off, it is by less than a millisecond.

The Egmont is a piece of alternating moods, and the orchestra glides through some sections and powers through others.

The smooth, swirling motions of Ozawa's baton — like the fine brush strokes needed for a delicate portrait — draw out a gentle sound from the winds. Near the end, the BSO conductor

Where fear is a child's constant companion

There are, however, as many differences as there are similarities. Soldiers carrying M-16 and Galiel rifles patrol the streets. Barbed wire stretches across the city like an unchecked weed, and here and there Miklat, or bomb shelters, are carved into the rock of this hilly village. Sadly, the shrill whistle and loud bang of the Katushya rockets has become a way of life here.

It is not so evident during the day, but once the sun sets, it soon becomes obvious that all is not right in Qiryat Shemona.

"Everywhere we go at night, we run," Ben-Avi says. "If we go to the movies, we run to them and run back home. We are always afraid of the Katushyas."

The children's fear is well grounded. Two weeks ago, rockets fell on the town. While no one was hurt, the attack served to remind the townfolk that while their country may be at "peace" with its neighbors, war, like the sun setting over the hills is always just over the horizon.

This most recent attack, according to Deputy Mayor Moshe Nizri, was the latest in a series of shellings that have gone on since Israel's War of Independence in 1948. While it has been quiet of late, Nizri says that rockets hit the city or its outskirts "quite often."

Any refrain that does exist, according to Israel Defense Force (IDF) spokesman Capt. Roni Gilo, is due to the fact that the IDF has trained and supplied the Southern Lebanon Army (SLA). The SLA is a 2,000-man army made of Lebanese Christians sympathetic to Israel that patrols southern Lebanon. Nizri says that while rockets are still fired, the attackers do not have the time to aim accurately and they do not hit the targets like they used to.

While the rockets may not fall with the same accuracy as they used to, Nizri says people in Qiryat Shemona are still very worried.

"During the wars," he says, "this place was bombed with a vengeance that was as bad as any city in World War II."

He adds that the town is not satisfied with the protection the government is currently offering.

"This is the question," Nizri says. "Something must be done. It is not reasonable that citizens, civilians, will be attacked. If one wants to fight, he should fight the army, The army is the one responsible for the security and in a way it is the body that should pay the price for giving security. Soldiers may get hurt, but this is the job of the army, not the civilians."

While the civilians are in danger, Nizri says the majority want to stay.

"The people here and the people in any other place are the same," he says. "They don't want to get hurt and they don't want their children to get hurt. There is a bizarre difference, though. It is due to the political situation Israel is in. If they were to bombard Paris, (the French) would take the whole world against it. But here we have gotten somehow used to it. People live here, their families are here, their businesses are here. Even if they wanted to go away they just can't pick up and leave."

There are some who do, though. Nizri says about 4 percent of the population leaves every year. While many of his counterparts in planning departments of other cities have problems increasing growth and development, they do not have the factor of shelling to contend with.

"The average citizen says he will continue to live here," Nizri says, "but I wouldn't say he feels safe enough. I would say that, in the last few days, people are talking less about investing and developing. I see hesitation coming to the people. We have reasons to believe the situation will get worse. We have information, not exactly for publication, that more and more terrorists are going south to the Becca Valley and using the shelter of the Syrian army. If you add that information to the information we hear from the SLA soldiers coming to town for a cup of coffee, we don't see that the situation is going to be getting better."

In addition to the numbers of people leaving, those who stay face a 12 percent annual unemployment rate. To bring the plight of his city to the government, Qiryat Shemona Mayor Prosper Azran was, at the time this was written, on strike at the Prime Minister's office

"We feel we do not have proper defenses here," Nizri said. "Now (Azran) is on strike for this reason and for other reasons. When the child in the family is ill, you take him to a hospital and you give him the best treatment for his ills. That one point that is natural, but you also spoil him a little bit — give him some chocolate or give him something special because he is in a bad mood. That is the kind of treatment we are trying to get from the government."

Regardless of the politics, both internal and external, it is still the children who bear the brunt of shelling. It is something city officials are cognizant of.

According to Sipora Slater, an English teacher at the Theodore Racoosin School, there are programs, both in the school and at the local Mogen David, or Red Cross, that help the children deal with the stress and fears.

Slater, who moved to Qiryat Shemona from Cambridge four years ago, says the army comes in and tells the children what to do in the event of rocket attacks. In addition, teachers and students have group sessions where they can talk about their fears and how to cope with life in a de facto war zone. The stress program offered by Mogen David, Slater says, is now being used across Israel to deal with similar situations in other cities and towns.

Barry Silverberg, Slater's colleague from Winnipeg, Canada, adds that the children teach him as much as he teaches them.

"I'm relatively new here," Sliverberg says. "I've been here three years. These children, who have been living here during the worst times, have a lot to teach me about living during bombardment. I know what it's like to be bombarded in a miltary position with weapons you can defend yourself with, but I have never lived though having my own home and family under direct threat. These children have, and they have a lot to say about it."

One of the things they talk about is the feeling of frustration that comes from hiding from an enemy they never see.

"When I grow up, I want to join the army," Ben-Avi says, "so I can kill all the terrorists."

Despite the shelling and the shadowy terror that haunts them, the children of Qiryat Shemona try their best to lead normal lives.

"I love this place," one young girl says. "I grew up here. My family and friends are here and it is just part of growing up. We go on."

'Rocco,' a.k.a. North Social Studies teacher Allan MacDougall, joined in a musical tribute to Wes Metro. Jay Zappulla photo

Rocco rocks again

By Maureen Azzato, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Impatient fans chanted his name, anticipating a unique rock and roll performance by a Newton North legend. The walls were shaking as 'Rocco' was carried into the hall on the shoulders of his devotees in a dramatic rock and roll procession.

'Rocco' was dressed in faded jeans and black leather jacket, cap and gloves, with his eyes and real identity hidden behind sunglasses. The sometimes-alias of Social Studies teacher Allan MacDougall came to life once again to perform a tribute to a special senior of Newton North High School.

"Wes Metro, this is for you," Rocco said pointing into the ecstatic crowd.

Newton North organized the fund raising rock concert in honor of Metro to purchase a $3,500 computer to facilitate his challenging future college years. Metro is confined to a wheelchair by cerebral palsy.

Through his years at North, Metro has commanded the respect of his fellow students and teachers who have looked beyond the handicap and discovered the courage of a determined student.

"All these people came to help out and it's all for you, big guy," Rocco said to Metro as he came up on stage after the performance for the unveiling of the computer. As Metro approached the stage, the audience cheered for him with a standing ovation.

Metro's gratitude was expressed through a letter he wrote to his friends.

"Thank you for this night of music and to such a great group of friends," Metro said. "Thank you Newton North for letting me have this night and for letting me study here at Newton North.

Metro also thanked his teacher aide, Dottie Hallett, who has worked with him since he was in the eighth grade. Besides being Metro's constant companion, Hallett takes Metro to all his classes, takes notes for him, helps him with his homework and feeds him lunch.

"With all the dreams Wes has had, it is now becoming a reality," Hallett said. "Now it's up to him. So, go for it, Wes."

School administrators congratulated Metro on his courage and thanked him for being an inspiration to all at Newton North.

"This is a night of great love and affection for a very special student," Rocco said.

The school celebrated a night of great accomplishment with jazz and 1950s rock. The Sisters, a Newton North song and dance group, teamed up with music teacher Richard Travers and Rocco on several songs. The Sisters also sang the Andrews Sisters' famous "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy".

Travers dominated the first half of the show, and Rocco's Hell's Angels character took the second half away with his dynamic rock appeal.

The night was more than sheer entertainment, as the performers never lost sight of the honorary guest who was the special foundation of the concert.

Tickets for the show cost $5 and refreshments were sold at the door before the show and at intermission. All the proceeds from the concert went to purchasing Metro an Apple IIc computer, printer, cable, external disc drive, an updated communicator, some software including word processing and a spelling checker.

Metro said the computer would help him in writing long papers and improving his writing. He was accepted to University of Massachusetts in Boston and plans to major in English literature.

Praises for Dr. King

believe nonviolence could be the answer to race hatred, Dr. H. Edward Whitaker, area minister for American Baptists, told the gathering. Whitaker and King attended Crozer Theological Seminary together in the late 1940s.

"There were many, as you know, who disagreed and struck out on other courses," Whitaker said. "All of those who rose and spoke against him, I ask the question, 'Where are they (now)?'"

King's was the "moving spirit" of revolutionary change that led to such other freedom-seeking groups as the women's liberation movement, said Whitaker.

In the struggle against oppression, "He always maintained the method may change, but the philosophy must remain nonviolent," said Whitaker.

The Rev. Howard Haywood, Myrtle Baptist Church pastor, said the public often forgets that King was foremost a Christian minister whose sense of warmth and caring is that of Christ's.

King's "life was motivated by his relationship to Jesus Christ," said Haywood, whose predominantly black parish has commemorated the civil rights leader on this day since his death.

The event recalled for Mayor Theodore D. Mann scriptures read at his temple on Saturday. In a passage from Genesis, "Moses and Aaron were pleading with the (Egyptian) pharoah, 'Let my people go,'" said Mann.

"Martin Luther King is the spiritual brother of Aaron and Moses in that respect," Mann said.

School Superintendent John Strand said King's message was, "We give ourselves to the struggle for peace."

Edwina Dyer, president of the NAACP's Middlesex branch, stressed America still is plagued by racial discrimination. As examples, she cited "the resistance to housing integration in Philadelphia, fire bombing in Cleveland and death threats in Chicago."

She read a 1963 letter King wrote in answer to white clergymen who wanted to slow the nonviolent movement against discrimination, asking the audience to listen "in the context of our time."

"We know from painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor," she read. "It must be demanded by the oppressed ... There comes a time when the cup of endurance runs over."

Reading a poem of her own, Lillie Jefferson, Myrtle Baptist Church clerk, asked if King died in vain. "Not if love hold reign, not if peaceful ways prevail," her poem answered. "And man releases man from travail."

Hospital workers to meet Tuesday

NEWTON — Newton-Wellesley Hospital's crisis and emergency team and aftercare services programs will meet on Jan. 28, at 7:30 p.m. Usen Auditorium, Newton-Wellesley Hospital. Speakers from the hospital's department of psychiatry will include a psychiatrist, nurse, psychologist, vocational counselor and social worker.

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY

OPAL CARE

Because of its high water content, the opal is one of the most fragile gemstones. It will crack if it becomes dehydrated. However, stable opals are certainly available. With proper care, the opal and other soft stones such as jade, turquoise and ivory can be worn with confidence. Soft stones may crack if subjected to sudden temperature changes. Forget what you may have heard about soaking soft stones in oil or water to strengthen them. It does not help. Soaking an opal for even a few minutes may extinguish its fire. However, some gemologists say that rubbing opals and ivory with olive oil may help them to retain moisture. Clean porous stones with soap and water. Do not use commercial solutions which may contain alcohol.

Opals come in many different hues. To find the one that pleases you, shop at CAROL "THE GOLD LADY". Our selection of all jewelry is hard to be compared anywhere. We'll also let you know the best way to care for any jewelry you own. If you like to wear precious gems in the form of earrings, rings, bracelets or pendants, we'll have it for you here in lovely settings. We can also reset or remount any piece of jewelry you have. Come in to our store at 109 Dalby St., Newton, Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

Cop's arrest at nightclub being probed

NEWTON — An internal investigation into the arrest of a Newton Police officer at an Allston nightclub began last week, Chief William F. Quinn has confirmed.

Officer James Caira and two other persons were arrested on disorderly conduct charges at the dance club, Heartache, on Commonwealth Avenue around 2 o'clock on a Saturday morning. Caira was off duty at the time.

Officials at Brighton District Court said the charge against Caira was dismissed after his arraignment the following Monday.

Quinn said that even though the charge was dismissed in court, the Newton Police internal affairs division will be looking into the case to see if Caira's actions were "inappropriate." Quinn said the investigation might take another week.

A Boston Police spokesperson said the three persons were arrested for "disorderly conduct in speech and behavior." The arresting officer was working a paid detail at the club.

Caira, a Framingham resident, has been a Newton policeman for just under two years.

Jones settles for $7,500 from BC

NEWTON - Boston College has paid a Newton Centre man $7,500 to not pursue a civil rights lawsuit stemming from his controversial 1984 arrest at a public lecture on campus.

Harlan E. Jones, 22, of 1087 Commonwealth Ave., said last week the university offered him the "out-of-court" settlement in June after he threatened to file suit charging BC with illegal arrest, racial discrimination and violation of his First Amendment rights.

Jones' attorney, David Kelston said the arrangement did not include any acknowledgement from BC that they had mistreated his client.

In September 1984, Boston College police arrested Jones on a charge of disorderly conduct during a lecture by conservative author William F. Buckley, Jr.

The incident occurred when Jones, who was a Boston University student at the time, and a white female BC sophomore unfurled a banner on a balcony behind Buckley protesting his appearance under the aegis of the "Social Justice Lecture Series."

BC police moved in on the pair at the request of a student government official sponsoring the lecture, but they let the female student go, placed Jones under arrest and then dragged him out of the auditorium while members of the crowd cheered.

Jones claimed he was within his rights to stage a peaceful protest and said his treatment was racially motivated.

BC eventually dropped the charges against him in Newton District Court.

The initial offer for a settlement would have included a $15,000 payment to Jones if he did not discuss the arrangement publicly, but both parties eventually agreed on $7,500 with no conditions.

Jones said BC's initially claimed his arrest was "a responsible action," while, behind the scenes, a school representative was offering him a $5,000 settlement to shortcircuit a potential civil rights suit against the school.

He is the son of Hubie Jones, president of Boston University's School of Social Work and Katherine Jones, former vice chairman of the Newton School Committee.

Stiff opposition to halfway house plan

NEWTON — A proposal to locate a home for mentally ill adults on a Newtonville site last week ran into stiff opposition from residents, a negative vote from the Planning Board and a "no decision" from the aldermanic Programs and Planning Committee.

Under the proposal, the city would purchase the home at 515 Walnut Avenue with government money, then lease the space to Alternative Home, a nonprofit company which operates homes for mentally ill adults at two other Newton sites.

The Planning Board first voted 4 to 1 against recommending a special permit to allow the home in a residential area. Then the aldermanic committee declined to advise whether the city should purchase the site, with some members saying the issue of a special permit should be decided first.

Until last August, the building was used as a home for adolescents by Lutheran Services. Alternative Home would house 10 mentally ill adults there with a staff member present at all times, according to executive director David Schultz McGuire.

If aldermen were to approve the proposal, the state would grant $340,000 and the federal government $60,000 both to purchase and renovate the home. Legally, the premises would be owned by the Newton Community Development Authority, a city agency.

Residents said a home for the mentally ill in their neighborhood would pose a threat to many children who live in the area, as well as to students at nearby Newton North High School.

Alderman Louis Irwin cautioned against interpreting his committee's "no decision" as a negative for the home. "I might point out that we could have recommended denial and we didn't," he said.

Public hearing on new moratorium plan

NEWTON — The new, revised moratorium petition will undergo its first official test Thursday night at the Land Use Committee's public hearing.

The petition was introduced after a ballot question on the issue in November showed Newton voters are in favor of a moratorium by a 2-1 margin. According to moratorium lobbyist Thomas Paulini, the vote "sends a clear mandate to the Board of Aldermen that the people want a moratorium."

Many aldermen, like Verne Vance, Paul Daley, Carol Robinson, Sondra Shick and Matthew Jefferson say they do not see the need for a moratorium. Paul Coletti, however, said election night that while he questions the need for a moratorium, he "will take into consideration the vote on the petition," when making his decision.

Mayor Theodore Mann has also come out against the moratorium, saying the Village Study and the work of the recently adjourned Zoning Review Committee (ZRC) are better ways to gauge and control development in the Garden City.

Alderman Richard McGrath, a moratorium supporter and ZRC member says it will take "between four and six months" for the board to deliberate the ZRC report. He adds that the moratorium should be passed until the ZRC recommendations are implemented.

While no final decisions will come out of the public hearing, it will provide an opportunity for the public to voice opinions before the Land Use Committee, who will take any initial actions.

Daytime abduction at Woodland 'T' stop

WALTHAM — A Newton woman was abducted from the Woodland MBTA station in the afternoon last week and driven to Waltham where she was raped, according to Waltham Police.

Police said the victim, in her early twenties, was forcibly taken from the station at around 4:30 p.m. and taken to a Waltham location near Rte. 128 at the Lexington border.

According to police, she was raped in the car but was unable to tell police the exact location of the alleged rape because her head was covered.

She was then driven back through Waltham to Cleveland Circle and dropped off. The suspect then fled on foot.

Police this morning said details were sketchy and they are not sure if the car in question was the suspect's, the victim's or a stolen vehicle.

The woman was examined at Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

50 new cars headed for Green Line

NEWTON — Residents should notice improved service starting this summer as 50 Japanese-made cars are added to the Green Line's existing fleet of 120 cars, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Bay Transit Authority (MBTA) said.

Spokesman Vin Carbona said the first of the new cars is already being tested in Boston and six to eight are scheduled to be added to the Green Line in late spring or early summer.

Carbona said the Green Line, which includes the Riverside branch Newton residents ride, is probably the MBTA's most congested.

"I'm confident this will definitely ease the congestion," said Carbona. Residents "will notice increased service."

The Japanese model cars are costing a total of $52.5 million of federal, state and MBTA money, he said.

Made by the Kinki Sharyo Company of Osaka, Japan, the new trolleys hold out the prospect of improved service by increasing vehicle runs and upping the number of passengers each train can hold, Carbona said.

Currently, the Green Line averages approximately five minutes between each run, he said. More cars would allow the MBTA to shorten the time gap between each train, he said.

Green housing plan held in committee

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The aldermanic Land Use Committee, after four hours of deliberation, delayed action last week on a petition for a 251-unit development on the site of the former St. Sebastian's Country Day School.

There were no major objections to developer Alan Green's plan to convert the 16-acre site straddling the Newton-Boston border on Farlow Hill. However, the committee, at the behest of Alderman Richard McGrath, agreed just after midnight that there were too many issues Green could not satisfactorily answer to grant the zone change and special permit needed to begin construction.

"This is a very complicated petition," McGrath said. "I agree that Mr. Green has been very cooperative. The problem is that we should not rush through this petition and leave a lot of unanswered questions."

McGrath — who owns an irrigation company — asked for details of Green's plans for drainage of the site, which sits on a steep hill.

McGrath said the reason he placed so much importance on the drainage issue was the fact that the natural drainage process would be interrupted by the roofs and blacktop associated with the development. While Green pointed out that there would be a retaining wall along the perimeter of the development leading to the municipal drainage system, McGrath wanted specific information that Green could not provide.

McGrath's stand was backed both by neighbors who generally favored the plan and fellow aldermen Matthew Jefferson and Verne Vance. Vance, while not a member of the Land Use Committee, attended the meeting as a representative from Ward 7.

"I think the alderman raised a very good point here tonight," Susan Lane of 22 Chamberlain Rd. said. "We assumed that there would be review of the drainage problem. I have to say that we generally approve of Mr. Green's petition, but I think it is a good idea to study it more carefully."

Both Jefferson and Vance agreed with McGrath that there were just too many complicated issues to deal with in one session.

Drainage was not the only concern. Green's petition, in part, hinges on his ability to obtain a special permit and zone change from the board and a change in laws dealing with age restrictions from the state legislature. A bill is pending in the Statehouse that would allow Green to make age a condition of sale. The developer is pitching his plan on the premise that at least one occupant of a majority of the units be age 55 or older.

The true story of the city's surplus

A Newton resident and taxpayer was momentarily stymied recently when his young son asked him to explain just how the city has ended up with such a whopping surplus of funds for several years in a row.

A smart boy, the kid knew something about Proposition 2½, mainly that it put a limit on the amount of revenues a city could collect from its residents. The boy also remembered that, after the tax cap was first passed into law several years ago, city managers were crying "foul" and warning residents that essential city services, like police and firefighting, would suffer dearly under the new regimen.

Given the big scare and the threats, the boy wondered, how could the city claim, only a few short years later, that it had between $5 and $6 million in unused funds stashed away in its coffers.

The father, uninitiated in the subtleties of high municipal finance, thought for a moment — a long moment. This was not a question like, "Why is the sky blue, Daddy?" This was something that, as a father, he had to respond to.

"It's kind of like this, son," the father finally responded after long thought. "There once was a man who drove a big, big car, one of the biggest in the entire Commonwealth of Massachusetts. What with the oil embargo, rising oil and gas prices, the growing nationwide clamor for conservation and the advent of small cars that promised many, many more miles for the gallon, this man became very uncomfortable with his own car's wanton, wasteful appetite.

"So, the man went on a concerted campaign to improve his own car's mileage. First, he corrected his own driving habits, concentrating on stretching every gallon to its maximum mileage. No more jackrabbit starts. No more running over 55 mph.

"Then he changed a lot of the car's running gear. He bought tires that promised 30 percent better gas mileage. He bought spark plugs that promised 40 percent better gas mileage. He bought special motor oil that promised 25 percent better mileage.

"Finally, the same mechanic who had talked him into his previous purchases talked him into a wonder of a new carburetor he promised would give the man another 40 percent miles per gallon, especially if he burned the latest in mileage-stretching gasoline, which promised another 20 percent improvement."

The son, wondering just what direction his father was taking, asked, "Then what happened, Dad?"

Dad responded, "Well the man got in his car, with all the new, improved equipment on it, and he took a test drive around the city. After about ten blocks, his gas tank overflowed.

"And that, son, is how the City of Newton managed to end up the last fiscal year with somewhere between $5 and $6 million in surplus funds."

Mideast report

The muggers have grenades

By Howard Altman

"We went to Hawaii, but our luggage went to the Mediterranean.

There seems to be a great deal of fuss these days over flying to the Middle East. Upon my departure a few weeks back, friends were warning me not to go and offering their prayers for my safe passage.

While the concern was appreciated, the problems encountered are by no means new. Ever since Moses and his crew wandered around the desert looking for a place to call home, traveling in that part of the world has been an adventure, to say the least.

The bible is full of stories of bloodshed, looting and pillaging. Practically no chapter goes by without someone getting killed in the process of moving about the ancient holy land. Just because we are a society with newfangled inventions like microwave ovens and MTV, it does not mean we are immune from 5,000 years of perpetual hatred.

We in Fortress America should consider ourselves fortunate. Having two oceans as borders, the strife in the rest of the world might as well take place on Mars. While riding on the MBTA or New York City Transit system after dark may not exactly be the healthiest of endeavors, the muggers don't have hand grenades, at least not yet. In the Middle East, hand grenades and machine guns are as commonplace as umbrellas on a rainy day in Boston.

In Israel, the Egged buses are stopped every so often so a soldier can come on board and make sure all the luggage has an owner. Signs in English, Hebrew and Arabic warn passengers to report any loose luggage to the bus driver because it is in the loose baggage where terrorists leave bombs.

Crazy as it may seem, Israelis shrug off the potential danger. Ilan Shchori, a reporter for Ha'Aretz in Jerusalem, went as far as to point out that more Isrealis die on the highways every year than in the wars. In America, for many a trip to the Middle East means a trip to purgatory.

On my flight over, one woman said that she was more worried when she visited New York City than all her years in Israel.

"I was terrified," she told me. "The whole time there, I kept thinking about the television shows like 'Kojak' and all the violence that takes place on the streets and in the subways. For three days I just stayed in my room after dark."

Not everyone takes the violence lightly. The first signs of what to the rest of the world is reality came to view in the form of armored cars on the runway in Zurich. Once on the ground, passengers going to Israel are taken by bus to a concrete block house on the tarmac of the airport. There, greeted by machinegun-toting Grenzpolizei, passengers are taken into the building where one-by-one they and their luggage are searched for weapons.

In London, the security is even tighter. Passengers are taken off the El Al flight and packed into a small room, guarded by British troopers also with machineguns. To go to the bathroom, one must present his passport and run a gauntlet of security checks. With the air in the small enclave stifling from the breath of two hundred passengers, many were understandably nervous.

To the older people, the men and women who lived through the Holocaust, being packed in the small room because they are targets of people who want to kill Jews brought back nightmares. Some said the stuffy, cramped room reminded them of the boxcars that took them to Aushwitz, Bergen Belsen, Birkenau, Buchenwald and the other deathcamps. "Why are they packing us in here," one old woman asked nobody in particular. "Somebody could roll a handgrenade in here and kill us all. I don't care how many people are guarding us. If they want to kill us, they will."

King's dream still far away for black kids

By Julian Bond

If you want to have a good life, try not to be born black. That's nearly a one-way ticket to poverty, according to the Children's Defense Fund, a national advocacy group that speaks for poor and minority children.

Recently, the group reported that, compared with white children, black children are twice as likely to: die in the first year of life; be born prematurely; suffer low birth weight; have mothers who receive late or no prenatal care; be born to a teenage or single-parent family; see a parent die; live in substandard housing; be suspended from school; be unemployed as teenagers; have no parents employed; or live in an institution.

Black children are three times as likely to: be poor; have their mothers die in childbirth; live with a parent who has been separated; live in a female-headed family; be placed in an educable mentally retarded class; be murdered between ages 5 and 9; be in foster care; or die of known child abuse.

Black children are four times as likely to: live with neither parent and be supervised by a child-welfare agency; be murdered between one year of age or as a teenager; or be incarcerated between age 15 and 19.

Black children are five times as likely to be dependent on welfare or become pregnant as teenagers. And they are 12 times as likely to live with parents who never married.

These depressing statistics are supported by an equally depressing set of facts that serve to illustrate the probable life chances of a baby born in the United States with dark skin.

Eight out of every 10 white children live in a two-parent family; only four of 10 black children do. Each month in 1982, nearly 3,000 girls age 15 and younger gave birth; almost six of 10 of those girls were black. Births to unmarried teens occur five times more often among blacks than whites.

In 1982, over 55 percent of all births to black women were out of wedlock; among black women under 20, the proportion was over 86 percent. For 30 years, these out-of-wedlock ratios have been increasing. For blacks, they have now reached levels that have all but guaranteed the general poverty of black children for the foreseeable future.

In 1950, only about 18 percent of all black infants and only 36 percent of black infants born to teenagers were out of wedlock. The driving fact in this trend has not been an increase in the number of black infants born to teenage mothers. Rather, it has been a decline in the marriage rate among pregnant young black women.

Since 1947, the marriage rate for pregnant black 15-to-17-year-olds has dropped by 80 percent; the marriage rate for black 18- and 19-year-olds is down about 60 percent.

Whether black or white, young mothers under age 25 heading families are very likely to be poor. The poverty rates in 1983, were 85.2 percent for young black female-headed families and 72.1 for young white female-headed families.

But black female-headed families are much more likely to stay poor. In female-headed families with older mothers (ages 25 to 44), there is a 25 percentage point gap between black and white poverty rates.

Nearly one in every 10 black women receive only last trimester or no prenatal care. Among black teen mothers under 15, two in 10 receive only last trimester or no prenatal care. Almost 60,000 babies are born annually to teen mothers who receive late or no prenatal care.

Young black college graduates have an unemployment rate almost as high as white high-school dropouts. One of four black college grads cannot find a job. Among black high-school dropouts, more than half are unemployed.

"These facts require urgent community and national responses," says Marian Wright Edleman, president of the Children's Defense Fund. "Those who would rather moralize than help should not forget that poor children did not cause or choose their poverty, nor can poor children escape poverty with government policies that snatch income, food and health care from the poor in order to pay for defense increases and tax breaks for the wealthy."

Whatever you do this year, try not to be born black.

Carmichael demands apology

Open letter to Michael Malec, president of Board of Aldermen:

I am writing to you to express my deep dissatisfaction with the performance of "Deputy" Public Works Commissioner Scalese at the Public Facilities Committee Wednesday night, Jan. 14.

For a department head to demonstrate a weakness of professionalism in public by being arrogant and disrespectful to the elected representatives of the people (aldermen) is one thing, but, when that person, who has been hired to serve the public, loses control of himself and insults a community whose taxes go to pay his salary, he creates an incident that cannot go unanswered.

Mr Scalese's sarcastic comment referring to Nonantum as "Cultural Center of Massachusetts" is an offensive insult to the residents of my community and requires an immediate apology.

Further, the silence of Public Works Commissioner Hickey, who was present and heard Mr. Scalese's remarks, created an illusion of approval of Scalese's comment. Commissioner Hickey should have apologized for his subordinate.

Mike, I expect either through you, or by resolution of the full board, a demand for an apology from both Mr. Hickey and Mr. Scalese to the residents of the Nonantum community.

Unless there is a public apology prior to the next full board meeting, I will be forced to request a suspension of the rules to submit a resolution to the board condemning the actions of both Mr. Scalese and Mr. Hickey.

Halfway house good neighbor

To the editor:

I would like to comment about the controversy you described in a your Jan. 1 issue, regarding establishing of a halfway house for recovering psychiatric patients at 515 Walnut Street.

As an Auburndale resident, I live and work near an Alternative Home that has existed for several years already on Auburndale Street. I pass by it on a daily basis and have had occassion to meet some of its residents and well trained staff. I have been very impressed with how carefully run this home is.

Residents are indeed selected carefully both in terms of their ability to cope fairly independently (all work or attend school), and for compatability with one another. There are firm guidelines about behavior both at the home and beyond its limits, and continued stay is contingent on residents' abiding by the house rules.

The majority of Alternative Home residents go on to independent living, becoming even more indistinguishable from the rest of us than they are while there. Some go on to long-term communal living arrangements. A few need readmission to a hospital.

The home looks like any other. It is as calm as the adjoining homes. I keep being surprised that there are no distinguishing features that set it apart.

I am glad that Auburndale serves many citizens with special needs, including the elderly, the poor, and also a group of the retarded — all of whom belong in our community and enrich it through their diversity.

This well-run home for those recovering from mental illness fits well into our neighborhood. I hope that other Newton communities will learn for themselves that such a home can be a good and rather ordinary neighbor.

DPW head resigns

has not paid for an improved betterment, Hickey said. The DPW commissioner said he made the decision to remove the walkway a week and a half ago, but had to wait until weather permitted.

"Anything inefficient or (having) even the perception of not being proper won't be tolerated by me," said Hickey.

Scalese's walkway was damaged March 29, 1984 in a snowstorm that knocked down a tree and broke a window on Scalese's house, said Hickey. A short while later, city workers removed the tree, said Hickey.

Scalese maintains the work on his sidewalk qualifies as a necessary repair of a hazardous situation. Before the resurfacing, much of that walkway was damaged both before and during the storm, he said.

After the storm, he said, he cleaned out the walkway "as best I could while waiting for repairs I assumed would be done since it's (the walkway is) on city property."

Asked if he felt he was being accused unjustly, Scalese said, "No question about it ... I feel it was a legitimate repair of a dangerous situation."

Aldermen Richard McGrath and Ronald Marini were pressing for an investigation into the matter late last week.

Marini said he discussed the issue with the City Engineering Department on Wednesday and an official agreed to inspect the site the next day. That evening, he investigated the scene and discovered that the resurfacing was "not a patch" for repair but a "regular length sidewalk," Marini said.

"If Mr. Scalese had not resigned, I would have demanded he be fired," the alderman said.

On Friday, McGrath said he would ask the Board of Aldermen to conduct a formal inquiry. In addition to charging Scalese with "extremely improper" conduct, McGrath said the DPW removed the sidewalk "out of embarrassment."

"The DPW should have insisted he (Scalese) pay for it" rather than remove the walkway, said McGrath.

Scalese insisted his resignation has nothing to do with the sidewalk controversy, but was the result of some DPW employees and aldermen undermining his efforts to enforce department policy.

On taking over the job of deputy DPW commissioner, he discovered inefficiencies and tried to make workers conform to department standards, he said.

Scalese said he would go to locations around the city where DPW employees were supposed to be working and find no one there. Department trucks often were "rolling around aimlessly" or left running outside of restaurants while the men were inside, he said.

"I frequently got calls from citizens who were irritated because they (employees) were in areas where they shouldn't be ... and didn't seem to be doing any work," Scalese said. Citizen complaints were a "frequent occurrence," he said.

He also sought to reduce from two to one the number of evening personnel at the Elliot Street Control Center, he said. "In my visits to the Control Center, I never found them," he said.

When he found workers gambling before work, he stopped the practice, he said. He said he also discovered beer bottles there.

All of these issues "precipitated a process of undermining against me," Scalese said.

The undermining came to a head on Jan. 5, when city streets froze during a storm and some residents complained their roadways were not being sanded, he said. Workers refused to carry out his orders preparing for the storm and the street-cleaning operations, he said.

But Scalese said he would have remained as deputy commissioner were it not for the actions of some aldermen at a heated, two-hour session of the Public Facilities Committee Jan.12.

Scalese said Alderman Paul Daley distorted the truth when chastising him for radioing the Control Center to sand his own street. Scalese said he and Murdock Fraser, Control Center director, named 24 streets for DPW attention but employees placed only one on the log — his own.

Daley could not be reached for comment.

Scalese also criticized an alderman, whom he did not name, for demanding no employees be disciplined for their actions during the storm, he said.

Aldermen refused to accept the point that he had made preparations for the Jan. 5 storm cleanup, but workers simply refused to carry them out, Scalese said.

Marini — one of the aldermen Scalese described as disruptive to the performance of his job — defended both his colleagues and DPW employees.

Board members have to question city employee performance, especially when there is great public criticism such as there was the day of the storm, Marini said.

"If Mr. Scalese feels constructive criticism ... is disruption, he should resign," Marini said.

Employees did not perform well for Scalese because he did not provide effective leadership, Marini said. Scalese was too harsh with employees in trying to solve alleged DPW problems, Marini said.

Marini said he respects Scalese for his successful work as a naval commander for over 20 years, but the DPW is a different environment requiring different techniques of leadership.

"If I was him, I wouldn't stir up too many problems," Marini said. "I'd just walk away."

McGrath said Scalese or any employee manager has to deal effectively with employee resistance.

He criticized Scalese and Hickey for not going to the control center the night before the storm when they discovered orders were not being carried out.

"Sabotage is something you sometimes have to deal with," McGrath said. "If you can't deal with it, you're not a good manager."

BSO's Mr. Ozawa tunes up the NSO punches the air to call in the strings for a dramatic entry.

When the roughly five-minute piece is done, some musicians try to explain what they have just experienced.

Waban resident and NSO first violinist Jack Lifsitz describes Ozawa's conducting as "very simple, very direct, easy to follow and exciting, of course."

Rebecca Vizulis, a Newton Corner resident and a second violinist, says, "He's not initimidating. He seems to be a humanist."

Her husband, Andris, says simply, "He brings himself down to our level."

"A lot of the thing seems to come from inside," he says of Ozawa's conducting style. "He led us to follow him with his breathing."

Asked why he had emphasized breathing, Ozawa quips, "Maybe it's because I have bronchitis."

But then he explains the importance of breathing to music stems from its origins — singing. The same precise breathing required of singing brings scores of musicians together for a smooth instrumental performance, he says.

The NSO is very well trained, with an exceptional string section, he says. "As a community orchestra, it seems to me they love music," he says.

NSO conductor Ronald Knudsen also is a violinist for the Boston symphony. To him, Ozawa is a gentleman with a warm, colorful personality.

"One's personality shows in the music you make," he says.

Ozawa's Sunday night performance was to be his first guest conducting of a community orchestra in years. Constance Kantar explains Ozawa, a Newton resident, is appearing partly because of Knudsen.

"He has a high regard for our conductor and for our orchestra as a group," Kantar says. The NSO has always maintained a strong association with the Boston symphony, she says. The NSO founder is Michael Sasson, a former BSO violinist who is now principal guest conductor at the La Scala Opera House in Milan, Italy.

Coogan's dismissal request rejected

Pollenz's contention is that only the communities or private institutions directly involved in the case can sue for recovery of the $1.55 million in funds Coogan claims to have earned through private telecommunications consulting work.

The GBPC's suit also seeks the return of at least $250,000 believed to have been paid to Coogan by an Illinois firm that helped to create the Boston Area Police Emergency Radio Network (BAPERN).

Coogan allegedly deposited all the money in a secret Bank of Boston account, using it for personal and commercial investment purposes.

In response to the suit, Coogan has filed a counterclaim seeking the return of the account's balance of $130,000, which Bank of Boston officials turned over to the GBPC when they learned of the case.

He also claims that Newton, which acts as the GBPC's fiscal and purchasing agent, violated competitive bidding laws in the contracts that led to the installation of BAPERN.

So far, six of the 18 law enforcement agencies whose payments for BAPERN equipment are known to have ended up in the unauthorized account have joined on as plaintiffs in the case.

In the coming weeks, Pollenz intends to depose GBPC Chairman and Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn, Newton City Solicitor Daniel Funk and attorney Elliot Silverstein, who was involved in the early stages of the BAPERN project as a federal grants administrator.

Joan K. Stuffel and Claire Frechette, two secretaries who worked closely with Coogan at Newton Police Headquarters, along with Capt. John Salemme and Sgt. Jack Roman, two members of Chief Quinn's command staff, were among those deposed last week.

Air rights plan unveiled

The new construction, Morris said, would be "no higher than the Vernon Court apartment buildings near the Newton Corner Library." The advantage, he said, would be the creation of a village center in Newton Corner that does not currently exist because of the Turnpike.

In Newtonville, the UDBC draft report calls for construction of 150 units of rental housing, 800,000 square feet of office space, 6,000 to 10,000 square feet of retail space in an arcade and a walkway connecting the Paris 26 restaurant with the businesses on the other side of the Turnpike.

That height of that construction, he said, would conform to the Gold Star restaurant north of the roadway and the eave of the church south of the roadway.

Morris said air rights development is "just part of an overall plan for the city." The UDBC draft also outlines recommendations for rezoning of manufacturing zones along the "spine" that he said would create "the opportunity for between 1,150 and 1,450 new housing units as well as between 130 to 160 low- and moderate-income housing units as per compliance with the 10 percent housing ordinance for developments requiring density bonuses."

The draft also recommends that a "green belt" be created along Washington Street and parts of Commonwealth Avenue that would "create an opportunity to improve both the visual environment and traffic flow and develop walking and bike paths with minimal traffic conflicts."

Eye doctors or optometrists are professionals licensed to examine eyes and prescribe eyeglasses or contact lenses. They are governed by a regulatory board and subject to strict professional standards. One of those standards prohibits optometrists from working for non-professionals including eyewear stores and eyeglass "supermarkets".

These stores often feature advertising that talks about eye doctors but if you read closely– they don't offer professional services. They use phrases like, "appointments arranged" or "referral to an eye doctor". Of course these stores can't offer consistency or guarantee prices from eye doctor to eye doctor.

At Cambridge Eye Associates, professional standards, services and prices are the same at every one of our 18 offices and have been for over 10 years. You see, we are eye doctors – New England's largest family of eye doctors. And that's your best guarantee of high quality professional eye care at the lowest possible prices.

Toward a new independence for seniors

Upgrading elderly care

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The elderly crave independence, yet often — through the overly-protective practices of their loved ones — that is the one satisfaction of which they are deprived. When the elderly are smothered with protection, they can lose their self-esteem and sense of worth, and lose their desire to keep on trying in a society that will not give them a chance.

Many elders are capable of working and have a vastness of knowledge and wisdom to contribute, yet mandatory retirement at the age of 65 often cuts them off from society and forces many of them to become idle and despondent.

According to Secretary of Elder Affairs Dr. Richard H. Rowland, the increased life span of the 1980's will have a tremendous effect on society and on the system of caring for aging parents. At the turn of the century the average life span was 49 years, whereas today it is 74.

The new thrust of the Executive Office of Elderly Affairs is to promote independence in the lives of the elderly, Rowland told members of the Sunday Brunch Club in Newton Highlands.

"Most elderly people want independence and would like to maintain their own lifestyles and households," Rowland said. "It is possible to effectively care for aging parents at home through new state health and social services."

In order to improve the quality of life for the elderly population, Rowland said his office is trying to divert frail elders from institutional placement in cases where it is not necessary.

There are 27 Home Care Corporations in the Commonwealth, and they take care of approximately 44,000 elders in their homes, Rowland said. These corporations offer homemaking services such as meal delivery, household maintenance services, and personal care.

Rowland said they also offer a respite program to give family members who care for elderly parents in their home a rest. Qualified staff members and case workers come to the home once or twice a week to fill in for family members caring for their parents.

"We know around-the-clock care is very hard and draining work. We know that a lot of people want to do it themselves, but we also know they can burn out, which can lead to a buildup of tension," Rowland said.

"It's just an opportunity for the family members to get out of the house and breath. They can go shopping, or out to lunch with friends so that they don't lose touch with their own lives while caring for their aging parents," Rowland said.

According to Rowland, no state in the country can compare to Massachussets in range, depth, and completeness of elderly care. The nursing home industry has grown rapidly in the past 25 years, and of the 800,000 elderly population in the state, 55,000 elders are institutionalized in nursing homes or rest homes, Rowland said. Of the 114 acute care hospitals in the state, 25,000 beds are occupied by the elderly, he added.

"The elderly make up only 13½ percent of the population in Massachussets, yet 51 percent of our hospital beds are occupied by elders," Rowland said. "It brings home the fact that health care is important to elders, and the type of health care they need is special."

The new Diagnostic Related Groups (DRG's) implemented by the federal government and funded through social security will have a profound effect on elders, Rowland said.

DRG's are a new method under Medicare for hospital reimbursement. A flat fee is paid to hospitals based on medical diagnosis and the average length of stay in hospitals for elders, Rowland said.

If an elderly patient is diagnosed for gall bladder surgery and doctors estimate hospitalization for five days, Medicare pays the hospital a flat fee based on the diagnosis. If the patient is dismissed before the five days expires, the hospital makes money, but the hospital will lose money if the patient is required to stay more than five days.

"No organization wants to run in the red, and the pattern seems to be that hospitals are kicking the elderly out before they are ready to leave," Rowland said.

Both private and non-profit hospitals ran high surpluses under the new DRG system this year because they have found a way to make money through the system, Rowland said.

"Municipal hospitals in large urban centers are feeling the brunt of the DRG system, as poor elderly patients are being dumped on them because they traditionally take everyone who comes in," Rowland said.

As a result of the DRG system, the federal government is cutting back on Medicare coverage of the 130 home health agencies and 90 visiting nurse associations in the state, Rowland said.

"This is the opposite of what should be happening, seeing as the system is squeezing the elderly out of hospital care," Rowland said "The problem is the government is not transferring the savings from the DRG program to the communities. These monies should be reinvested in community home health care, but instead the federal government is transferring the problems to the communities," Rowland said.

According to Rowland, the battle in the next few years is to pressure the federal government to redirect the money. DRG's are not going to go away, but there are some positive results of the new system, Rowland said.

"We are seeing a decrease of the myriad of unnecessary lab tests and X-rays hospitals used to conduct because the hospitals will no longer make money on them," Rowland said. "On the negative side, we are seeing more elders released from hospitals quicker and sicker than before, and we will need to supplement the communities with needed services, which is not happening right now."

There are approximately 1,000 home health care employees in the state, but Rowland said it is not enough. The number of employees should double because the need will be growing.

"The problem is that most of these employees are underpaid," Rowland said. "The tragedy is that we pay dishwashers more than we pay for care of the elderly, which are our own flesh and blood."

It is difficult to hire and keep nursing home employees especially on nights and weekends on a $3.60 hourly wage, Rowland said. The Executive Office of Elder Affairs will ask for a 50 cent wage increase across the board for nursing home employees during this year's budget season.

"We have to pay them the proper wages if we want to attract people who have a calling for this line of work," Rowland said. "We all expect champagne treatment on a beer budget. We want the best care, but we're not willing to pay for it."

If a nursing home employee is fired for neglecting or abusing patients, Rowland said the former employee could find a job at another nursing home the very same day because of the severe staff shortage.

"There is especially a shortage of qualified staff on nights and weekends, and on Monday mornings many elderly patients are found lying in their own feces and urine accumulated from the weekend," Rowland said. "I don't like telling you this, but it's a fact and you should know about it."

Even if states generate more community services, nursing homes will not go out of business because often it is the only avenue for incontinent patients whose problems are too severe for home health care, Rowland said.

Rowland pleaded with people to write to their local congressmen and state representatives to support the efforts of the Executive Office of Elder Affairs.

"If you don't want to do it for yourselves, do it for your friends and relatives who will reap the benefits. If not, by the time you're at risk for nursing home treatment, the whole system could go downhill," Rowland said. "This is one area we all have a stake in, because if we're fortunate, we'll all reach the elderly stage in our lives."

As modern medical miracles make the aging process longer and longer, society is trying to catch up with a changing situation that sees present service systems getting to be increasingly irrelevant.

Work after retirement

By Maureen Azato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Dr. Edward L. Bernays, the nephew of Sigmund Freud but better know as the "Father of Public Relations," is delving into a new area of study regarding employment opportunities for the elderly.

Bernays, 94, is in the midst of writing a book he says will serve as a guide for the elderly to find jobs in a market which does not demand their services.

Like Office of Elder Affairs Secretary Dr. Richard Rowland, Bernays advocates the independence of the elderly population. Bernays said his book will be very timely because Governor Michael Dukakis signed a bill last fall making mandatory retirement illegal.

"It's interesting that several states recognize that it is unfair to discriminate on age," Bernays said. "Age discrimination is as anti-American as race, religion, or sex discrimination."

According to Bernays, it is also illegal in the state to fire a person on the basis of age, with the exception of firefighters, police officers and in some cases teachers.

"This is a wonderful event in our history because we shouldn't judge people simply on their physical age, which is the least important," Bernays said.

A person has five ages, Bernays said. The chronological, physiological, mental, societal and emotional ages make up the real age of an individual.

"These ages don't necessarily have to match," Bernays said. "A man of 65 can be as emotionally jittery and excitable as as a six-year-old boy."

Bernays said his book will show citizens over 65 how to find jobs if they have been fired.

"Many old people are poor and don't want to depend on relatives for their welfare because they are capable of continuing work," Bernays said. "Some old people need to work, but a good many just want to work."

According to Bernays, 63 percent of the elderly population over 65 want to work, while only 37 percent are ready to accept retirement.

"If children of the elderly are not willing to take care of their parents, it is very difficult on old people. It is a moral insult to many old people to accept charity when they want to work," Bernays said.

Bernays holds a doctorate degree in humanities and law from Babson College and an honorary degree from Boston University. He is also the Honorary Chairman of Careers for Later Years in Boston.

New law would encourage elderly housing starts

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

BOSTON — If a bill sponsored by a local representative does not pass, developer Alan Green will be unable to tout his 251-unit housing complex on Farlow Hill as a "market rate elderly complex."

Rep. David Cohen (D-Newton) introduced a bill last session that would make it easier for developers to make age a condition of sale.

Green, who requested that Cohen introduce the bill, is counting on the bill's passage to call his development — to be located on the site of the former St. Sebastian's Country Day School — a market "rate rate elderly complex."

However, half of Newton's legislative contingent say they are unfamiliar with the bill.

According to Cohen, the law now on the books allows developers to include the age of 55 as one of the conditions for sale only on parcels containing 20 acres of land. His bill would reduce that figure to 10 acres. Since the Farlow Hill site in question is 16 acres, Green could not restrict sales to those 55 or older under the present law.

"I introduced the bill last session," Cohen says, "but it died in the Senate after passing in the House. Right now, the law says you cannot deny housing to anyone on the basis of age or grant anyone housing on the basis of age except for elderly housing if it is multiple-housing on 20 acres or more of land. My bill would change the law and I think it will pass, because I think a lot of people felt 20 acres is kind of arbitrary."

Cohen says the bill will encourage elderly housing starts.

"Right now," he says, "the state can build elderly housing on relatively small parcels of land, but private developers can only build large tracts of elderly housing. With money drying out for elderly housing projects, as a general policy matter we want to encourage elderly housing. More private developers will be interested if we reduce the amount of land they need to build on."

Cohen says his bill, which conforms to both the state and federally mandated definitions of elderly as being 55 years of age or older, has some "more subtle changes from the current law."

"With my bill, not everyone in the household has to be over 55," he says. "If a spouse is under 55, we didn't feel that the elderly person should be denied housing because his or her spouse has to be under that age. Similarly, in-house nursing help can be younger than 55. If the person is so elderly and so frail that they need that kind of help, it didn't seem to me that we ought to be denying that person elderly housing."

Newton Senator Jack Backman (D-Newton), chairman of the Senate Health and Human Services Committee and a noted advocate for elderly affairs, says he cannot comment on Cohen's bill because he "hasn't seen it yet."

"I am not familiar with (Cohen's) bill," Backman says. "It sounds like he is going in the right direction if it will allow more housing for senior citizens, but it won't be in print or assigned to a committee until February or March."

Rep. Susan Schur (D-Newton) says she is also unaware of the bill.

"I am concerned about the supply of housing," she says, "but I have not seen the bill and cannot comment on it."

Rep. Joseph DeNucci (D-Newton), chairman of the House Health and Human Services Committee and also an advocate for the elderly, says he is aware of the bill and supports it.

"This piece of legislation is consistent with what I believe in and I would support it without reservation," he says. "I feel it would encourage housing for senior citizens, which is important and proper."

While he supports the general concept of the bill, DeNucci has some reservations about the Green petition, where the "market rate elderly" units would sell for between $125,000 and $300,000 according to Green.

"Hopefully," DeNucci says, "the bill will encourage affordable elderly housing. I think the intent of it is proper and something I can support. However the financial constraints (of the Farlow Hill proposal) may be somewhat difficult. I don't see any harm in it, but how much a benefit it will be to the average low-income elderly person is another question."

Neither Backman nor Schur would comment on Green's petition before the Board of Aldermen. Cohen says while he supports the concept, he will not lobby on Green's behalf.

"(The petition) is something for the Board of Aldermen to decide," he says. "The concept is a very good one, but I would not presume to suggest to the Board of Aldermen what to do. I think that a proposal like this has merit and should stand or fall on that merit."

After-school 'gap' for older children

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Some parents say more structured after-school programs are needed for elementary school children on early dismissal days, but Larry Hasenfus from the Multi-Service Center said funds are scarce for such programming.

At the elementary school public hearing last week, Margaret Fogle said her 9-year-old child is "out loose" on early dismissal days because there are waiting lists for all the local day care facilities.

"Two times a week our kids are dismissed from school at 1 p.m. and it's an unbearable system," Fogle said. "Both my husband and I work, and our kid is out loose on the streets on those early days. I've been on the day care waiting list since April."

According to Fogle, more organized after-school programming is needed, or the schools should extend the length of school days on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

According to Hasenfus, many programs exist for children younger than 9, but there is a gap in the programming for older children.

"There is a gap, and I'd like to see more programming available," Hasenfus said. "Although there may be a need, there are financial constraints which make it difficult to get programs set up."

Hasenfus said he organized some structured after-school programs in the past but too few children attended, and there was not enough money to pay the staff.

"My general feeling is that there is a need for more supervised and structured programming for children on early dismissal days," Hasenfus said. "I'm not sure how much of a problem early dismissal days are for the kids or how much time they spend in the afternoons unsupervised, but I'm certain it's worth exploring."

The funding for after-school programming would have to come either from parents or an alternative source so programs could be offered for free, Hasenfus said.

"If parents or the schools find there is a need, we would be happy to try and set up programs," Hasenfus said.

Elementary school teachers use Tuesday and Thursday early-dismissal days for professional development, curriculum enrichment and parent-teacher conferences.

According to Horace Mann Elementary School teacher Vicky Patterson, the early dismissal days are important to teachers because no time is built into the school day for teacher curriculum enrichment.

"Professional development isn't even the half of what we do on Tuesdays and Thursdays," Patterson said. "A lot of people think we're real lucky because we get out early twice a week, but that's not the way it is. Most of us are here until four or five in the afternoon on those days."

Patterson said she does not know how other schools manage without short days for teachers. According to Patterson, teachers use Tuesdays and Thursdays to offer students extra help, to conduct parent-teacher conferences, for lesson preparation, monthly faculty meetings, paper grading, writing report cards and curriculum development.

There are also professional development workshops offered to teachers on those days. The workshops are intended to keep teachers updated on the latest developments in school subjects and instructional tools such as computers.

"We have parent and teacher conferences twice a year and they are very time-consuming," Patterson said. "Often teachers have to stay at school late because so many parents work until late afternoon."

It takes a teacher approximately one month to meet with all her students' parents, Patterson said. Often teachers have to work at home in the evenings and on weekends to finish grading papers, she added. "I think these short days are very necessary in order to maintain the quality of education we now have."

Director of Elementary Education Dr. Melvin Hines has met with parents and teachers to solicit their comments about early dismissal days. Hines plans to submit his recommendation about Tuesday and Thursday early dismissal to the School Committee on Jan. 27.

Stephen Bonica and Linda Sauro

Linda M. Sauro will marry Stephen Bonica in April

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Sauro of Newton announce the engagement of their daughter, Linda M., to Stephen Bonica Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Bonica of Waltham.

The bride-to-be attended Newton North High School and Aquinas Junior College and is currently employed as an executive secretary for Seidman & Seidman.

The future bridegroom attended Waltham High School and Bentley College and is a programmer/analyst for Blue Cross & Blue Shield.

An April wedding is planned.

Modeling pageant is March 2

The 1986 New England Model Pageant Preliminary to be held in Boston at the Copley Plaza Hotel has been set for March 2. Registration and rehearsal will begin on March 2 at 10 a.m. Showtime will begin at noon.

Prizes include expense paid trips to New York City to visit "The Agencies" for teen and adult winners as well as crowns, banners, trophies and portfolios.

Youth and child division winners will also receive U.S. Savings Bonds.

Scholarships are awarded at New England Model and are given to contestants chosen by the judges, not necessarily the winners.

Last year, $12,000 in scholarships were awarded to the New York Academy of Theatrical Arts. Also, scholarships were given to a New England Dance Company, and a New England Modeling Program.

The excitement, prizes and scholarships are only part of the picture. We are pleased to say that some of our past winners have gone on to careers in modeling; for example Pam Gidley can be seen on the cover of Teen Magazine and Kristian Alfonso can be seen on NBC TV's "Days of Our Lives" as Hope Williams Brady.

Age categories are 3-7 years, 8-12 years, 13-17 years, 18 and over for males, females and married or single people.

No experience is necessary to be judged on model potential. Interested contestants should call Norma at 617-442-6307 or 401-723-2900 for information and/or application.

Births for area families

A daughter, Jennifer, was born Jan. 4 at Newton-Wellesley Hospital to Melissa J. (Ingham) and Timothy Ostrom of Gibbs Street, Newton.

A son, Paul Angelo, was born Jan. 8 at Newton-Wellesley Hospital to Pasqualina (Leone) and Frank Cerminara of Thaxter Road, Newtonville. The baby weighed 7 pounds, 7 ounces and was 20¾ inches long at birth.

A daughter, Laura Ann, was born Dec. 9 at Waltham Hospital to Dave and Karen (Geoffrion) Albano of Pembroke. The baby weighed 6 pounds, 6 ounces at birth.

Grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Paul Geoffrion of W. Newton and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Albano of Auburndale. The baby's great grandmother is Mrs. Emily Guzzi of West Newton.

Scholarships available for high school seniors

The Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs has made available a variety of scholarships for high school seniors, for graduate study and one for study abroad for college students.

All applications must be received on or before March 15, 1986. All applications require signature of the local federation Woman's Club. Telephone Lee at 332-4820, Woman's Club of Newton Highlands, if you have any questions.

Susan Burg and Marc Wexler

Susan Burg marries Marc Wexler

The Royal Sonesta Hotel, Cambridge, was the setting on Nov. 10 for the marriage of Susan Beth Burg to Marc Jeffrey Wexler of Brookline. The double ring ceremony was performed by Rabbi Barry Rosen and Cantor Harold Lew.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard M. Burg of Sharon and Boca Raton, Fl. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Molly Burg of Sharon, and Mr. and Mrs. David Cooperstein of North Miami Beach, Fl. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Max M. Wexler of Newton Centre.

Amy Caplan of Sharon served as matron of honor for her twin sister. The bridesmaids were Gail Gurevitch of Watertown, Ronna Karesky of Chestnut Hill, Elaine Rubin of Brookline, Pamela Stoloff of Millburn, N.J., and Amy Wexler of Newton Centre.

Andrew Sisson of Washington, D.C. was best man. The ushers were Clifford Caplan of Sharon, Steven Church of Cambridge, Dr. David Hirshfield of Chelmsford, Daniel Ott of Newton, William Gwinn of Memphis, Tn., Peter Hegel of Hinsdale, Il., and Frederick Fellowes of Chicago, Il.

The bride received her B.A. degree from the University of Hartford. She is employed by Cabot Advertising, Boston, as a media planner/buyer. The bridegroom holds a B.A. degree from Boston University and an M.B.A. from the University of Chicago. He is employed as an assistant vice president at Northland Investment Corp., Newton.

After a wedding trip to France, the couple plan to reside in Needham.

Sandy Ellen Freund is engaged to Steven Lang of West Newton

Mr. and Mrs. Max Freund of Brooklyn, N.Y. announce the engagement of their daughter, Sandy Ellen, to Steven Lloyd Lang, son of Mr. Arthur Lang and the late Jeanette Lang of West Newton.

The future bride, a graduate of Stony Brook College of New York, received her Juris Doctor Degree from Hofstra University Law School. She is presently an attorney with the Manhattan District Council of the Internal Revenue Service. Her fiance, a graduate of Brandeis University, received his Juris Doctor Degree from Boston College Law School. He is currently in private practice in New York City.

A January wedding is planned.

Food co-op seeks new members

WELLESLEY — The New Community Food Co-op, serving families in Newton, Weston, Wellesley, Waltham, Needham and Natick, is looking for new members and currently has several job slots open.

The New Community Food Co-op is a group of 45 families who by food collectively and share the work in distributing it among members.

The 10-year-old co-op is non-profit and offers its members the opportunity to purchase, at lower than supermarket prices, fresh fruits, vegetables, eggs, cheese, bread, fish, dairy products, grains and spices and assorted health-related items. Also offered are cleaning products, flower and vegetable seeds and flats and cookbooks.

The co-op is all member-run with no paid positions. Jobs vary from bookkeeping to bagging produce, from cashiering to childcare. Every member puts in her/his share of work hours in return for the freshest and highest quality produce available, purchased that morning at the Chelsea Market.

The co-op is located in the basement of the Unitarian Church of Wellesley Hills, 309 Washington St. It is operational from September to June. The co-op is open on Thursdays and open to the general public from 4 to 6 p.m. when excess food is sold.

All the food available is fresh — the produce is purchased through the New England Food Cooperative Organization at Chelsea Market.

Anyone interested in joining the food co-op or finding out more about extras for sale to the public, should call Linda Dobkin at 237-4549 or Becky Callow at 893-2955. Please do not call the church for information.

These dolls were dressed by members of the Auburndale Women's Club Service Committee.

Group donates 'dressing skills'

Members of the Auburndale Women's Club Service Committee contributed their "doll dressing skills" to the Red Cross Holiday Doll Program resulting in the completion of 244 doll outfits from across the West Suburban Region. The dolls, distributed through local agencies and inner city agencies, were given to deserving children during the holiday season. Those participating included: Myrtle Curtis, Cay Desmond, Janet Doswell, Flora Ellington, Ann Erlanson, Peg Fox, Peg Keyes, Marion Lynch, Helen Jackson, Betty Nabors, Eta Twombly and Terry Zeles.

Chief announces new child abuse unit

NEWTON — Chief William F. Quinn of the Newton Police Department announced the formation of a special unit, the Child Abuse and Sexual Exploitation Unit. This unit will operate out of the Community Service Bureau.

"Although this is not a radical departure from the current treatment of Child Abuse and Sexual Exploitation of Children investigations, the new unit will provide officers who are especially trained in these types of investigations," the chief stated.

The chief said the initial reporting and response to these types of problems will continue as normal with patrol officers responding to initial reports. The responding officer will make a determination as to whether emergency treatment of the child is necessary, and if so, will make the appropriate referrals.

"Whether an emergency exists or not," the chief added, "the case will be referred to the new unit for further investigation." This will also provide for a centralized location for records, thus assuring even greater confidentiality for those parties involved."

The officers in the new unit will act as liaison between the police department and other agencies involved, such as Department of Social Services, the District Attorney's office.

"Middlesex District Attorney, Scott Harshbarger fully supports this idea," stated Chief Quinn, "and he also has members of the Newton Police Department on his county-wide Task Force On Child Abuse."

The chief stated that although child abuse and child sexual exploitation is not a major problem in Newton, it does exist. This new unit will provide for even more professional handling of this problem by the Newton Police Department than in the past. It will also instill a greater confidence in the citizens of Newton that problems of this type will be handled promptly, efficiently and discreetly by the Newton Police Department.

"It is believed that those incidents reported are only the 'tip of the iceburg,'" said the chief, and he is hoping an increased public confidence will lead to greater numbers of cases reported to police.

Chief Quinn concluded by stating that anyone interested in information on Child Abuse and Sexual Exploitation, or in the new unit, should call the Newton Police Community Service Bureau at 552-7252.

Residents pack cafeteria to hear Village Study

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Any fears the public would choose not to participate in the Village Study were laid to rest last week as residents jammed the City Hall cafeteria to participate in the first of 15 public forums.

More than 125 residents gathered to offer input and hear Connery Associates of Winchester, the firm hired to perform the $191,000 study, reveal their report on existing conditions in the city.

The meeting had to be held up at one point so extra chairs could be provided for residents standing along side walls and stuffed in the rear of the cafeteria.

Begun last August, the study seeks to examine each of the city's village centers and to lay out a plan for the city's future.

The meeting was designed to gather input for residents across the city. In the next three months, similar sessions are scheduled in village centers so residents can voice the concerns of their respective areas.

"If we get this amount from the village centers, we will really have fulfilled the ideal of citizen participation," said Joshua Katzen, chairman of the Economic Development Commission.

The commission has been meeting with Connery since September to help define the boundary of each village's commercial center and work out a format for the public meetings.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann, who greeted the crowd, said he was pleased by the public response.

"It's a bigger crowd than they anticipated," he said. "I'm delighted to see the turnout."

In his opening remarks, Mann stressed one major Village Study goal. "From an executive point of view, it is our desire to maintain the residential nature of our community," he said. "The village system is pleasing ... attractive."

Following Mann, consultant Robert Catineau of Connery unveiled the preliminary report. He was then given a taste of public participation as residents from across the city offered their own views on what the study should address.

Waban resident Hyman Horwitz said that, to be complete, the Village Study must address the lack of public transportation in the Garden City. Right after World War II, public transportation began to decline and became almost nonexistent around 15 years ago, he explained to the press.

"Newton was a delightful place when we had public transportation," he said.

But parking, traffic, zoning and the impact of development in nearby towns were residents' most common themes.

Vincent Filipone said at least 1,000 parking spaces are needed in Newton Centre.

A balance has to be struck between commercial and residential interests, he said. "My main point is working cohesively," he said. "We need commerce as well as residences."

Ruth Levens of Newton Lower Falls urged Catineau to take into account development in Waltham and other communities, which could increase traffic on Garden City streets.

Catineau agreed with her and said the study would look at nearby communities.

Responding to a question from Anthony Matt of West Newton, Catineau said the study would examine development of space over the Massachusetts Turnpike "in villages where it applies."

When a resident urged that the study determine the origin of traffic through Newton, Mary McShane of Segal DiSarcina, a subconsulting firm for Connery, said it is more important to determine traffic volumes and what should be done about them.

Taking office

Statue of Liberty raffle offers trip to New York

NEWTON — The Newton Committee for the Restoration of the Statue of Liberty, co-chaired by Marion Lent of the committee and Barbara Sydney of McDonald's Newton, is currently selling raffle tickets for a trip to New York City on July 4 for the unveiling of the Statue of Liberty.

The lucky winner of this local raffle will win two nights accommodations donated by Travel Your Way, Inc. of Newton, a leased Dodge Aries for three days donated by Silver Lake Dodge and Leasing, and $200 in expenses donated by McDonald's of Newton. McDonald's of Newton also underwrote the expenses of the raffle program.

Tickets are available at the two Newton-based theatres — the academy in Newton Centre and the West Newton Cinema — as well as from both Lent and Sidney. For more information, call 244-2894 or 965-4240.

'Pitt Street' photography exhibit opens Jan. 26

BROOKLINE — If you ever felt the urge to revisit the home, street or town of your youth, you'll feel special affection for the new show that opens Sunday, Jan. 26, at Hebrew College entitled: "Pitt Street: Views of 1937 Jewish Life on the Lower East Side of New York."

Walter Rosenblum, internationally-recognized photographer best known for his expertise on photographer Lewis Hine, has reprinted four dozen of his best photos of the Pitt Street location where he lived for the first 16 years of his life.

"Seven of us lived here in a three-room, three-story walk-up," Rosenblum explained via telephone from his home in New York. "When I was 18, I became involved in a W.P.A. (Works Progress Administration) project that asked us to depict city life." Rosenblum first decided to "photograph New York," then narrowed his focus to the Lower East Side, and finally recognized the value of bringing all the color and resonance possible from one particular setting — in his case, Pitt Street.

When Hebrew College in Brookline invited him to mount an exhibit that would parallel its film series on "Coming to Grips with America: the Jewish Experience on Film," Rosenblum decided to review his 1937 negatives and give new pictorial life to a once thriving Jewish hub.

Rosenblum, who has taught photography at Brooklyn College for 38 years, became nationally-known as co-curator of the Lewis Hine photography retrospective, which was ultimately invited to be shown at the Vienna Bienalle and throughout China. Starting as a small show at a Manhattan photo gallery, the Hine works caught the attention of the curator of the Brooklyn Museum who asked Rosenblum to put together a major retrospective of Hine's work. To accomplish this, Rosenblum traveled all over the country uncovering additional, unpublished examples of Hine's photography.

The Hine project eventually became a total family adventure, engrossing his wife, who became historic advisor, co-curator and co-author of his book, "America and Lewis Hine."

His daughter, Nina Rosenblum went on to edit the film "America and Lewis Hine" that opens at the Frances and Abraham Katz Film Forum Tuesday, Feb. 4, at 7:30 p.m.

Winner of the Women in Communications' Claron Award and the Industrial Documentary Association's Achievement Award, both in 1985, Nina Rosenblum said her interest in Hine was stimulated initially by her mother and father.

A graduate of Cooper Union College and Queens College, both New York, Ms. Rosenblum is currently working on a feature film called "Lena," about an immigrant to this country in the 1920's; a feature-length documentary on photo-journalist W. Eugene Smith; and a film, "Reel Women," about women in film.

She will be appearing as a discussant at Hebrew College at the Boston premiere of her film "America and Lewis Hine."

The Rosenblum show will be mounted at Hebrew College through March 16.

For a respite from the demands of continuing care.

If you have vacation plans that cannot include an elderly family member, or if your family simply needs to take a short break from the demanding task of caring for an elderly person, The Respite Care Program at Mediplex of Newton can help you.

The Respite Care Program is designed expressly to provide a warm, home-like environment for the short-term care of the elderly.

Each short-term guest benefits from several levels of resident nursing care, full rehabilitative facilities and services, barber and hairdresser, complete food service, and social activities.

Both private and semi-private accommodations are available.

In addition, the program costs you less than 24-hour home nursing care, and gives the elderly a chance to make new friends.

Kinderworks finds its niche in the market

By Tammy Jordan
Foster's Daily Democrat

PORTSMOUTH, N. H. (AP) — New England is obscured by a sea of red pushpins on a map of the United States that hangs on the wall of Chuck Spinale's and Andy Kaplan's Portsmouth workshop.

Representing stores that sell their wooden children's furniture, the pins radiate out from New Hampshire, reaching as far as California.

The map represents the realization of every small businessman's dreams — to grow from a tiny, home-operated business to a nationally recognized company with accounts sprinkled across the country.

Spinale, 37, of Barrington and Kaplan, 32, of Portsmouth did just that, and they did it in only 2½ years. The two woodworkers are the founders and owners of Kinderworks, a wholesale children's furniture company that makes chairs, tables, toy boxes and blocks and has just started making toys.

"The stuff is selling just as fast as we can build it. It's going out the door. We know the market's there. We know we're filling a niche in the market and it's full steam ahead," said Spinale.

Started in garage

The two friends started their business in Spinale's two-car garage in Barrington in 1983 when Spinale, the father of three, got fed up with the poor quality of furniture he was buying for his children.

"I was constantly complaining to Andy about the children's furniture that I was buying for my own kids," Spinale explained. "I was constantly repairing it. It was falling apart. I was even to the point where I was buying furntiure for my children and before I'd even let them use it I was making these alterations to it to try to strengthen it, because I knew it just wouldn't make it, it just wouldn't last."

The last straw was when Spinale's daughter told him a table in her playroom had collapsed.

"The legs had actually just come out from under it and the table had just collapsed in front of her," Spinale recalled. "So I complained to Andy about that particular day and Andy said, 'Why don't we just do something? Let's design some furniture we think is of high quality.'"

And so it all began. Working in Spinale's garage, the two carpenters made a chair. When their families and friends saw it, "everybody thought, 'That's great make me one, too,'" Spinale said. And they realized, "Maybe we've got something going there."

They quit their jobs as carpenters with the Perini Corp. at the Seabrook nuclear power plant to devote their time to making children's furniture.

Kaplan, who Spinale says is the better salesman of the two, took their idea to several toy stores, and the response was encouraging.

"People liked the design because it was so much different than what was available on the market, not only in construction, because it was so ruggedly made, but also in design. It was more of a contemporary design, which really reflects our taste," Spinale said.

Stores requested a table to go with the chairs, so the two men began building tables. "From there, it really just snowballed," he said.

They are now shipping 75 Kindersets (a table and two chairs) and 50 to 75 Kinderchests (toy boxes) a week to specialty and children's stores.

Spinale and Kaplan say the reason behind their success is quality.

"I can sit here and confidently tell you that ours is the highest quality table and chair set and toy boxes available anywhere," Kaplan said.

It is solid, sturdy furniture made of hardrock maple. The quality is reflected in the price, but Kaplan said he believes parents are willing to pay more for better products. Locally, the table and chair sets retail for $120 to $140 and the toy boxes about $95.

"Most people are getting fed up with the junk," Kaplan said. "And parents are older. They're getting older before they're having their first kids. They have more disposable income. Chances are that both of them have worked, that they've saved some money, and that they are more interested in quality goods," he said.

Made in N. E.

All of the parts used to make Kinderworks products are manufactured in New England. The chair legs are made in Vermont, the seats in Maine, the backs in Massachusetts. They are assembled, sanded, lacquered and packaged in the Kinderworks factory on Islington Street by a crew of nine, including Spinale. While Kaplan spends most of his time on the road selling the products, Spinale remains in the factory overseeing production.

They plan eventually to make everything at the Kinderworks factory, "from the very beginning right to the very end," Spinale said.

But when they were first starting out, they made the decision to subcontract with other manufacturers for parts because they didn't have the capital to invest in the expensive equipment necessary to make the parts themselves. Even if they had the money, they say, they weren't ready to invest it until they were sure the furniture would sell.

"Well, as things turned out, we know damn well it will sell. It is selling, and now we're getting into the idea of manufacturing ourselves, assuming more and more of the manufacturing," Kaplan said.

Because of a public stock offering, Kaplan and Spinale say they were advised not to discuss any financial aspects of the business so they did not divulge their profit figures.

But in interviews with Venture and Entrepreneur magazines last year, the two said they had expected to break even on their original investment in November with revenues of $350,000. For 1986, they projected a 15 percent net profit of $550,000 in sales. They hope eventually to become a multi-million dollar company.

When they incorporated in March 1984, Kaplan and Spinale considered marketing their furniture by advertising in magazines and by direct mail, but found selling it through retail stores worked best "because what we make, even though you're looking at nice pictures of it, you can't appreciate the quality until you feel it," Kaplan said.

They spent almost a full year testing prototypes, developing designs and obtaining patents. It was November 1984 before they shipped out their first table and chair sets.

Now, Kaplan said, they have one new product scheduled for release every three months for the next 18 months.

The trick to buying new carpets

By the Editors of Consumer Reports

Wall-to-wall carpeting can make your home look luxurious. But it's not cheap. For instance, a 15-foot-by-24-foot living room will require around 40 square yards of carpet. At $6 a square yard, that's $240; at $20 a square yard, $800; and, at $30 a square yard, that's $1,200.

Consumer Reports' editors say that you may be able to save on wall-to-wall carpet if you've done some careful planning before heading for the showroom — and you know what to look for when you get there.

First of all, measure your floor. To get a rough idea of the square yardage you'll need, divide the square footage by 9. (Keep that figure in mind as a multiplier when considering square-yard prices.) Remember that the yardage you'll be quoted by the store will probably be higher than the yardage you calculated. Most carpeting is 12 feet wide, so it has to be cut or pieced depending on the floor area. That, and allowances for closets, door insets and the like, can add to the yardage required.

Before laying your carpet, the store will take more precise measurements in your home. Ask to see their plan, so that you'll know where seams will be located and can satisfy yourself that you aren't buying more carpet than you need. You may be able to buy less carpet if you can put up with an extra seam or two.

Wool is a good material for carpet, but it is very expensive. Wall-to-wall carpet made of nylon is very durable and can be made to look virtually indistinguishable from wool.

Nylon has been greatly improved through the years as a carpet fiber. It now can be made to repel dirt and moisture and to resist the build-up of static electricity. Carpets with those properties are the "advanced generation" nylon, sold under such names as Antron, Anso, Ultron and Zeftron. Expect to pay more for those brand-name fibers than for a carpet made of "generic" nylon fibers.

The more yarn a carpet contains, the better it should wear. The pile yarns in a dense carpet support each other; they bend only slightly when you walk on them, your foot touching just the top of each tuft. In a carpet with a sparse pile, each step tends to squash the yarns, exposing some or all of the yarn's length to wear.

You can get a rough idea of the relative density of a carpet by examining samples in the store. Rub the carpet, trying to work your fingers through the pile to the backing. Or bend the sample back on itself to see how much of the backing shows.

It's best to ask the store about density. The store has one critical number that usually denotes density. It's called face weight, and is expressed in ounces per square yard. Generally, the higher that number, the denser the carpet. Without that number, you can't really comparison shop. (Luxurious carpets have a face weight of 30 ounces to 40 ounces or more.)

The editors add that you should shop around for carpet. Remember that you're also buying a service — the carpet's installation. So you may want to choose stores based on their reputation for service as well as on their prices. Once you've settled on a carpet, make sure you know exactly what its price includes. See if you have to pay extra for moving furniture, removing door saddles and floor moldings, and taking up the old carpet and padding and hauling it away. You might be able to save by doing such chores yourself.

Umbrella insurance policy a good addition

By Neville Frankel

Dear Mr. Frankel:

What exactly is an umbrella liability insurance policy, and who should buy one?

P.L., West Roxbury

Dear P.L.:

Anyone can be sued. But the wealthier you are the greater the potential damage. A court fight may be calamitous even if you win, since defense costs can run into many thousands of dollars. To minimize the risk, more and more people are buying personal liability umbrella insurance with limits in excess of $1 million.

This form of coverage is called "Extended Personal Liability." It is in addition to the liability protection in motor-vehicle and residential insurance, picking up where those policies leave off. Umbrellas are so-called because they rise above the basic protection and shield you against damages that could be assessed for any number of reasons — not just physical injury. The list typically includes libel, slander, character defamation, shock, mental anguish, sickness or disease, false arrest, wrongful entry or eviction and malicious prosecution.

Occupational liability is excluded in most contracts.

A politician who slanders an opponent, for example, could not look to an umbrella for help. Policies also exclude professional activities, so a physician will still need malpractice coverage. You must have auto coverage (if you own a car) and homeowners or tenant liability insurance in amounts prescribed by the issuer of the policy. The amounts vary somewhat among companies.

Most carriers require $100,000 in residential liability and $300,000 in auto coverage. People who have their underlying coverage with some companies get a 15 percent discount on umbrella policies purchased from the same insurer. Premiums may range from about $70 a year for $1 million in protection to $250 for $8 million.

When a judgment is rendered that exceeds the limits of the auto or residential insurance, the umbrella policy pays the difference up to the policy limit. Thus, if you should be ordered to pay $500,000 as a result of an auto accident and you have $300,000 in auto liability insurance, the policy would pay the additional $200,000. They normally pay legal expenses and compensation for court appearances if the amounts exceed what is paid by the underlying coverage.

These policies are comparatively cheap because, despite increasing litigation, insurers have not had to pay off very often. A total of only 35 claims were filed last year against one major carrier which has more than 40,000 policies in effect.

The average claim paid on these policies, however, was $93,000 — an amount that would be financially crippling for most families. And that was over and above the amounts paid by auto and residential insurance.

If you don't drive, own motor vehicles or have responsibility for living quarters, your chances of being sued are probably negligible. Your chances of being sued are greater if you have children who drive or possessions that could inflict injury, such as a swimming pool, boat or snowmobile. Pools and recreational vehicles can not only cause injury, but make you look like an easy target for people inclined to sue.

Some assets such as retirement plans could be beyond the reach of the court. But a legal adversary could still end up with everything that is attachable: your savings, investments, non-residential real estate and personal property.

Someone who is injured on your property, whether invited or not, may be able to collect damages if you are shown to be negligent in some way. That could include neighborhood children who cut through your yard or used a frozen slope for sledding if you take no action to stop them. Posting "no tresspassing" signs may not be enough.

In shopping for coverage, consider the following items:

•The total cost: A company may charge low rates for umbrellas but require high limits of auto and residential insurance — or vice versa. If you must increase your underlying insurance, factor the costs you outlay.

•Discouts: The company that insures your car or home may give you a price break.

•Legal defense costs: Note whether these would be included in the policy limit.

•Who is covered: Find out who is considered a "family member" and whether he or she would be covered while temporarily away from home. (For example, children away at college.)

•Where you'd be protected: Most policies pay claims brought only in the U.S. or Canada; others protect you anywhere in the world.

•Exclusions: These generally include intentional personal injury or property damage unless inflicted in protecting people or property; liabilities under workers' compensation and similar programs; and damage to your own property or losses through your handling or use of aircraft. A contract may also stop short of covering volunteer service, and work-related activities usually are not covered.

Ombudsman session to be held in Boston

NEWTON — A federally mandated ombudsman program that provides advocates for the residents of the 46 nursing/rest homes in Belmont, Brookline, Needham, Newton, Waltham, Watertown, Wellesley and Weston will soon be training new members.

Ombudsmen are trained, certified volunteers who serve as advocates for residents of nursing/rest homes and their families. The ombudsman acts as a mediator between the resident and the staff. If the resident has a concern, the ombudsman will attempt to resolve the problem.

The West Surburban Nursing Home Outreach program in conjunction with the Executive Office of Elder Affairs will hold a training session on Jan. 28, 29, 31, and Feb. 3, and 5, at 38 Chauncy St., Boston.

Issues to be covered include "residents' rights," "interviewing and negotiating" and "aspects of aging." Ombudsmen are certified by the Executive Office of Elder Affairs at the completion of the program.

Nursing home outreach is a non-sectarian, community program sponsored by Jewish Family and Children's Service with partial funding by West Suburban Elder Services, Inc.

The road to NEW ORLEANS

Fans give Pats swarming sendoff

Howard Ulman
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS — At least 10,000 fans showed up Monday at T.F. Green Airport in Warwick, R.I., to see the Patriots off to their first NFL championship game.

"No. I've never seen a sendoff like that," said defensive end Julius Adams, a 14-year veteran who will retire after Sunday's game. "It's a good thing to see the New England fans behind the Patriots."

The fans who swarmed T.F. Green State Airport began lining up early Monday and by the time the Patriots arrived at 3:25 p.m. for their charter flight — an hour behind schedule — they were massed behind ropes and barrels that kept them off the tarmac.

The size of the crowd may have been unusually large, but the Patriots are getting used to road trips. They won their three playoff games away from home and arrived several days early for their contests with the Los Angeles Raiders and Miami Dolphins.

Coach Raymond Berry, in his first exposure Monday night to the media army covering the Super Bowl, said he doesn't expect his players to have much trouble handling them.

"This is just part of the routine," he said.

The Patriots planned to return to practice here today after working out on just two of the eight days since their 31-14 victory over Miami in the AFC title game.

At the airport, the crowd was enthusiastic.

"We appreciate you being here," offensive guard John Hannah said from atop a flatbed truck. "You've been behind us all the way and now we're going to beat the Bears."

While the airport crowds already were looking eagerly to the Super Bowl, William H. Sullivan Jr., facing the biggest game in his 26 years as owner of the New England Patriots, says a court decision could make it his last.

"We will have to sell," Sullivan said two hours before his team arrived here Monday for Sunday's Super Bowl with the Chicago Bears, if an appeal of a costly ruling against him is upheld,

Tony Eason en route to plane

However, if the decision is overturned, "I'd say it would be pretty good odds we would" retain the National Football League club he has owned since its inception.

The odds for the Patriots winning the Super Bowl are not good, but that hasn't stopped Sullivan from putting off discussions about a possible sale of the team until after the title game.

"We've had some proposals," he said. "We put them on the back burner about six weeks ago but it wasn't until then that I felt we could go to the Super Bowl."

Sullivan wouldn't mind having a judge on his side in his appeal of a ruling favoring stockholders who contended that he paid them too little for their shares when he assumed full control of the franchise in 1976.

The Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts heard the his appeal on Jan. 8, said Sullivan, who added that he didn't know when a decision would be made.

"That is probably the date on which I would make my decision" on whether to keep the team, he said. If he loses, Sullivan says "it would certainly make it difficult (to keep the team)."

Sullivan said a judge ruled that he not only would have to pay the former stockholders more for their shares but also compound interest on the difference between what they received and what the judge decided they deserved.

Sullivan gave no figures.

Reality setting in for Pats, fans

By The Associated Press

Reality moved just a little closer to the dream this week for the New England Patriots and Chicago Bears.

Both teams were scheduled to arrive in New Orleans Monday and start practices Tuesday in preparation for Sunday's Super Bowl at the Louisiana Superdome.

For the Patriots the road to the Super Bowl has been a series of hotels, airports and little fan support.

New England started its NFL playoff adventure with a 26-14 wild-card victory over the New York Jets at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J. They arrived in Los Angeles five days before their 27-20 playoff victory over the Raiders Jan. 5 and in Miami four days before their 31-14 triumph over the Dolphins Jan. 12 in the AFC championship game.

"We realize that it's taken a lot of hard work and we're just going to go down there with a sense of purpose," said Patriot kicker Tony Franklin. "It's not really that easy to get distracted when you've got somebody that's as good as the Bears that you're going to be playing."

The Bears coaching staff, however, sees New England's success on the road as a sign that the Patriots are a very good football team.

"They're the best team I've seen on film," said Bear Coach Mike Ditka.

Kind words, but they don't change the fact the Bears are heavily favored to beat the Cinderella Patriots. Only the Oakland Raiders, a 27-10 victor over Philadelphia in 1981 at the Superdome, emerged from the ranks of the wild-card teams to win a Super Bowl.

Both teams are making their first appearances in the Super Bowl. They met during the second week of the season, with the Bears winning 20-7 in Chicago.

The Bears' shuffle to New Orleans has been nothing short of devastating. Two shutouts, 21-0 over the New York Giants and 24-0 over the Los Angles Rams in the NFC title game, both at home.

No team has ever registered a shutout in the Super Bowl.

"It's always in our defense's mind," said defensive tackle William "The Refrigerator" Perry, of a possible shutout.

With the Super Bowl often comes Super distractions in the way of an army of newsmen and the attractions of the host city, in this case New Orleans' famed Bourbon Street.

"It's a big time full of hoopla and lots of distractions," said New England's Greg Hawthorne, "but you've got to put it in perspective. You're there to play ball and not to get too crazy."

Pat center Guy Morriss said the media crush that will bear down on the players can be irksome and he advises them to "just relax. It can be a pain but, let's face it, we'd rather be answering questions (than be out of it) ... It's a pleasure to be there."

Hawthorne was with the Pittsburgh Steelers when they won the 1980 Super Bowl. Tight end Derrick Ramsey was on the Oakland Raiders in the 1981 contest when they beat the Eagles, who had Franklin and Morriss.

Franklin describes the week of news conferences and bustling hotel lobbies in a lively city like New Orleans as "mass hysteria." But he thinks the Patriots will cope well with the distractions even though it's the first time for most of them.

Burglar scores with Super Bowl ticket heist

WEYMOUTH (AP) — A thief scored extra points after breaking into a home here earlier this week when he walked off with cash and two tickets to the Super Bowl game next Sunday.

Tickets for the National Football League championship game between the New England Patriots and the Chicago Bears in New Orleans have become scarce commodities and Dorothy Haines said she was shocked when hers were taken.

"I could not believe that I waited so long for this wonderful event to happen, and then, bingo. He found a gold mine," she told The Boston Herald.

Mrs. Haines, 51 and a Patriots season ticket-holder for 11 years, may receive better news today.

Jim Greenidge, a Patriots spokesman, said the team may be able to cancel the stolen tickets and issue new ones to Mrs. Haines.

"I'm not sure, but I think so," he told the Herald, adding that Mrs. Haines should expect a call from the ticket manager.

Mrs. Haines said the thief broke a rear door window Saturday morning while she was working at the Children's Hospital blood bank and her husband, Richard, was running errands.

"I had put the money and the tickets in a nice safe place in a bureau drawer," she said. "I had a goodly sum of money. I guess I should have put it in the bank."

Mrs. Haines said she and her friend Barbara Murphy, also of Weymouth, will make the trip to New Orleans as planned whether or not she gets tickets.

"We've already paid for the flight and the room, which are not refundable," she said. "Now we have a room and a flight — everything but the tickets."

Local family gets patriotic

DEDHAM — The tree in the front yard of the Lavangie home on Elm Street is dense with red, white and blue bows.

And just in case there is anyone who does not understand the significance, the New England Patriots stickers on the door clear up any possible doubt.

"We are all kind of Pats crazy," Bernadotte Lavangie said.

"We were all sitting here last Saturday, saying we should do something for the Patriots. I said, 'I know,' and that's when we decorated the tree.

The bows are made of thick yarn, she said.

First time around is always sweetest

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

There hasn't been this much commotion since Moses lead his people out of the desert. Perhaps, years from now, a 21st century of Cecil B. DeMille will stage a movie depicting the plight of New England Patriot fans, who, like the bearer of the Ten Commandments, waited a long time for the promised land.

It took Moses 15 more years than the Pats to reach his promised land, but that will not take away from the sweetness. An event like this can only happen once. While the Patriots may again go the distance, the excitement will never be quite the same.

We never forget our first love.

There is no place to go to escape the hoopla. Everyone, or so they proudly proclaim, has been a Patriots fan all their lives — despite the usual grumbles early in the season from the Foxboro faithless.

If the team was leading, cries of "don't worry, they'll blow it," filled the room. If the team was losing, one heard the smug, "I knew it, they're the Pats." When Grogan went down, all New England let out a collective groan — a premature wait 'til next year.

Little did Patriots fans realize at the beginning of this season that next year was but a man-made glitch known as a calendar. This will not be another winter of discontent in 1986, Next year is here — Sunday, Superbowl Sunday.

As the season progressed it became more and more evident, even to this fan of the New York Jets (who?), that this would not be just another New England winter.

The first sign of difference was meteorological. There has been no snow to speak of. While New England is famous for its fickle weather, you could always count on some of the white stuff by late January.

A second difference was logistical. In any normal year, if the Patriots were making any plans at all for the Superbowl, it was through a travel agent.

This is no ordinary winter. This is no ordinary team.

Excitement is everywhere. Mohamar Khadafi and his antics are pushed off the front pages and pushed further back into the newscasts. Replacing him are pictures of the team carrying off coach Raymond Berry, players holding fingers in the air. Even the opposition has gotten into the act — especially a 300-hundred-pound behemoth known more for his gastronomic prowess than his athletic abilitites.

Over the airwaves, songs extolling the virtues of the team, the coach, the players and denegrating the foes from the Windy City are played and replayed.

If the media seems extravagant in its coverage, you must forgive them. It is not every year (except perhaps in Pittsburgh of the 70s) reporters find themselves working in a region crazy with January football fever. Many writers and sportscasters covering New England sports have, like the people who read their papers and watch their newscasts, waited a quarter-century to do a story on the home team going to the Superbowl.

We might stretch for angles and ask the same silly questions again and again. But any player will tell you that it is better to be asked than watch somebody else answer.

There are Superbowl sales and specials. Some stores are offering discounts and others are doling out give-aways. It is a slice of life unique to this nation and to the sport of football. While the World Series may be the fall classic, nothing can compare — in hyperbole at least — to the two-week orgy of emotion leading up to the big day.

In any other place, at any other time, it might be a little much, this reverence over a bunch of overgrown kids whacking the bejesus out of each other. But this is New England, and it has been 25 long winters, 25 years of waiting for the next. Come Sunday, there will be no more waiting. Next year is here.

116 million to tune in

How networks will cover Super Bowl

A total of 116 million Americans are expected to watch at least some of the NBC-TV broadcast of Super Bowl XX on Sunday, Jan. 26. Game time: 5 p.m. EST.

To cover the Chicago Bears-New England Patriots game from the Superdome in New Orleans, NBC is using play-by-play announcer Dick Enberg, commentator Merlin Olsen and technical analyst Bob Griese.

Host Bob Costas — along with reporters Pete Axthelm and Ahmad Rashad, plus commentator Larry King — will handle NBC-TV's pre-game show (3-5 p.m. EST).

"Our philosophy is that the game is the thing," says NBC Sports executive producer Michael Weisman. "We want as few interruptions as possible, and we want the game to be our focal point.

"Once the game begins, anything we do will relate to the game. We're not planning any 'Super Bowl Flashbacks.' We'll just concentrate on the game."

To do that, NBC will use over $11 million worth of electronic gear, including 21 cameras (15 stationary, five hand-held mini-cams and one unmanned). It will also have 14 replay-tape machines, two character generators (for on-air graphics) and one telestrator (a video chalkboard used by Griese).

The network, which is sending its telecast to 207 U.S. TV stations, is using a technical and production crew of 135 persons. It is ringing the Superdome with over three miles of camera cable and four miles of audio cable.

Ted Nathanson, NBC's coordinating producer for the Super Bowl, says the network plans to put its electronic resources to good use:

"With all our replay equipment, you can isolate more players and matchups and battles in the trenches. If the game is a blow-out, we can pick out some different isolates or statistics that might not make the telecast of a tight game. The overall philosophy is pretty simple. We will bring you the game and the circumstances and storylines surrounding it."

Will viewers notice anything new in the telecast of the Super Bowl?

"One possible difference in our Super Bowl telecast might be more of a concentration on the game clock," says Weisman. "Our feeling is that if there's one area where TV games may fall short, it's giving the viewers a better idea of how much time remains in the quarter, the half or the game. Usually, viewers are unaware of exactly how much time is left until we get to the two-minute warning."

The Super Bowl will also be telecast worldwide to U.S. Armed Forces Network. Additional TV feeds will be directed to: Australia, the Bahamas, Bermuda, Britain, Canada, Chile, Costa Rica, Dubai, France, Guatemala, Holland, Honduras, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Kuwait, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, the Philippines, Puerto Rico, Saudi Arabia, South Korea, Spain, Thailand and Venezuela.

For post-game coverage, NBC is stationing cameras in each of the locker rooms.

• NBC Radio Network coverage of the Super Bowl will be carried by 274 U.S. stations and will be broadcast worldwide by the Armed Forces Radio Service. NBC's Don Criqui and Bob Trumpy are the radio broadcasters.

McMahon's game plan

By Nrbuce Lowitt

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Jim McMahon would like to be able to do some running around during the Super Bowl, if not before it. For the moment, though, there's a sticking point.

It's on the end of an acupuncturist's needle — and McMahon would like it to be in his end. Literally.

The free-spirit quarterback of the Chicago Bears swears by acupuncture, but when the team arrived here Monday, he was all but swearing at the Bears' management for refusing to let Hiroshi Shiriashi on the team plane.

"The butt hurts," he said. "Hopefully, we can get the guy down here tomorrow." McMahon said he likely would fly Shiriashi at his own expense to this Super Bowl city, if necessary.

McMahon, who has had more than his share of bumps and bruises in his four seasons in the National Football League, took a helmet in the rump during the Jan. 12 NFC championship game, the 24-0 wipeout of the Los Angeles Rams.

He didn't participate in last week's practices for Sunday's game against the New England Patriots because, he said, it pains him to run, to sit, to follow through on his passes. He also spent a few moments graphically describing the difficulties encountered in performing a more basic human function.

McMahon said Shiriashi, the trainer for the Japanese national track team, had administered a treatment before the team left Chicago Monday and that McMahon wanted three more two-a-day treatments.

That the Bears frowned upon such treatment was irrelevant, McMahon said. "It doesn't matter if they approve or if they don't approve as long as it works. I had it done earlier today and I could use some more treatments. It relieved a lot of the pressure."

Creole, Cajun cooking will greet Patriots fans arriving in New Orleans

By Aileen Claire
NEA Food Editor

Jambalaya on the bayou! For hordes of New England fans descending on New Orleans this weekend, the Super Bowl represents — not only a chance to watch their long-suffering team — but a rare opportunity to eat and drink among the swamp rats.

Creole and Cajun cookery are spreading throughout the country. Many dishes are prepared with rice, tomatoes and peppers, and represent a melting pot of French, Spanish, American Indian and black influences.

But for those who won't be journeying down to New Orleans, here is a recipe you can try yourself on Super Sunday.

Pickled pepper creole

3 tablespoons vegetable oil
2 medium-size onions, chopped
2 stalks celery, chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
3 tablespoons chopped parsley
4 whole cloves
1/2 teaspoon dried basil
1/2 teaspoon cumin
1/4 to 1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper
1/4 teaspoon dried thyme
4 sweet pickled peppers, chopped
2 hot pickled peppers,chopped
1 can (28 ounces) tomatoes, drained and chopped
1 pound scallops or chopped tofu
4 cups rice, cooked

Heat oil in large skillet, and saute onions, celery, garlic and parsley for 5 minutes. Add cloves, basil, cumin, cayenne pepper, thyme, pickled peppers and tomatoes.

Cook, covered, for 15 minutes; add scallops or tofu and cook for an additional 10 minutes. Serve over rice. This kitchen-tested recipe makes 4 servings.

Note: One pound cooked chicken (diced) or other raw seafood may be substituted for scallops or tofu.

A bank bonus based on score

BOSTON — Shawmut Corp. has joined banks in Foxborough and Hartford in offering certificates of deposit pegged to how badly the Patriots beat the Bears in Super Bowl XX this Sunday.

For new customers, Shawmut has been hiked the annual interest rate of its CDs from 8.25 to 8.50 percent. In addition, Shawmut will add .02 percent for each point by the Patriots beat the Bears.

The Foxborough Savings Bank and the Bank of Hartford announced their super CDs after the Skokie Federal Savings in Illinois offered a Super Bowl CD. The Foxborough bank countered the Skokie offer with its "TD CD," which rises .01 percent for each point by which the Patriots win. If the Pats win by 10 points, the rate would be 8.35 percent.

Bank of Hartford went one better, offering to raise its minimum 8.25 percent .02 percent for each point the Patriots won.

Under the Shawmut offer, if the Patriots win by 10, the special "Super Bowl Bonus" CD rate will be 8.50 percent — plus 10 times .02 percent — for a total annual interest rate of 8.70 percent.

Skokie Federal Savings, in its initial offer, challenged Boston banks to show comperable confidence in the Patriots. But Neal F. Finnegan, vice chairman of Shawmut Corp., said Skokie uses a "fuzzy" definition of confidence.

"When the Bears lose, Skokie keeps their money in the bank," Finnegan said. "We've put our money on the table by raising out base rate and bonus. That's confidence."

As is the case with its predecessors, Shawmut's CD requires a minimum $500 deposit, which must remain in the account for one year. The bank's "Super Bowl Bonus" CD will be available through Friday

Bears fans scrap for airline tickets

CHICAGO (AP) — Chicago Bears fans anxious for a way to get to the 20th Super Bowl clutched teddy bears, munched on pizza and drank beer early today as they waited outside an airline ticket office for free roundtrip tickets to New Orleans.

"The Bears are No. 1, Chicago is No. 1, and I'm No. 1," said an exuberant Chuck Burtell, 23, of Harwood Heights, Ill., as he held a teddy bear in one hand and waved to the 10 people lined up behind him with the other.

"I had a harder time finding a way to get down there than I did finding a ticket to the game," said Burtell, who said he arrived at the Trans World Airlines ticket office at about 7 p.m. Monday.

Age mellowing Bears' Ditka

By Randy Minkoff
UPI Sports Writer

CHICAGO (UPI) — Winning has a way of mellowing even the most volatile of spirits.

So it would seem to be the case with Chicago's Mike Ditka, whose name seldom comes without some type of adjective describing him as "fiery," "temperamental," "strong-willed" or "erratic."

But it would be unfair to say the 1985 Chicago Bears' success has been the only reason that Ditka seems to have undergone some type of transformation. He still wants to win as badly as anyone and still seems capable of slugging it out with a filing cabinet, as he did after a game in 1983.

Ditka, himself, seems to have come up with a pretty good self-analysis.

"I learned that you can't let things get to you personally," Ditka explains. "When I first came into the league as a head coach, I did take it personally. But you can't let every disappointment or defeat affect you that way."

After losing a 38-24 Monday night stunner at Miami on Dec. 2, Ditka said, "Nobody's invincible. Nobody's perfect. We're going to bounce back. It will be good for us."

Patience, as much as anything else, has led to a more calm demeanor in the fourth-year Bears' coach. When he came into the league as a head coach back in 1982 after a stint with Tom Landry and the Dallas Cowboys, he was anxious. Anxious to turn around a team that had been among the lower echelon of the NFL.

He wanted to restore the Bears to the level that he remembered as a player in the early 1960s under George "Papa Bear" Halas.

The only trouble was that he didn't have the personnel — or the patience — to do it overnight. He watched a players' strike slow his recovery plan and saw some players who "weren't willing to pay the sacrifice," as he put it, stand in his way.

Ditka wasn't about to give up. He solidified his power base with the death of Halas and the resignation of general manager Jim Finks. He had a direct say in the type of players he wanted drafted and made it clear that people who did not like his style would be welcome to leave.

Some did, others converted, some still grumble. But winning is winning and most praise Ditka's ways.

"I think we have our differences," says Bears' quarterback Jim McMahon. "But there's no doubt on this team that people respect the man. He's willing to listen to other's ideas."

He may not always take the others suggestions now but at least he is willing to listen, something that may not have been part of the Ditka persona four years ago.

"Mike's determination to win rubs off on everyone," says linebacker Mike Singletary, a Ditka favorite. "He doesn't expect anything out of you that he isn't willing to give himself."

A case in point: after losing to Dallas last year, Ditka erupted in a post-game news conference, answering in brisk "yes" and "no". This year things were different.

"I matured. I made a mistake," Ditka said. "I'm not taking things as personally now."

One thing that hasn't changed about Ditka from the lean years to the salad days of 1985 has been his workalcholic tendencies. He is known to spend 18-hour days reviewing a previous game or preparing for the next.

But this season has shown a Ditka that doesn't consider everyone not a Bear fan an enemy. His relationship with the media has improved. He has shown a sense of humor, a sense of compassion and understanding.

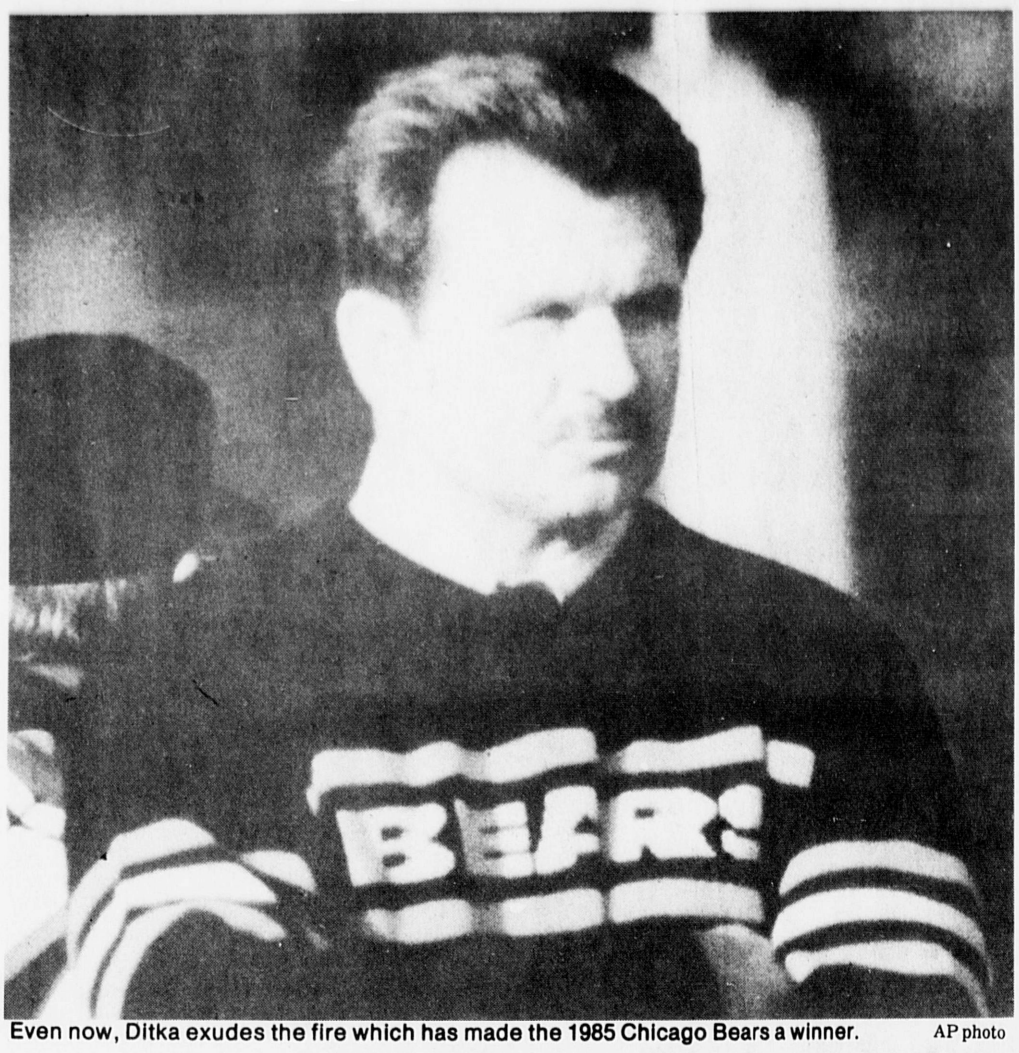
"I know that some people don't like me. But I'm a nice guy," Ditka clowned with the press.

The Ditka of 1985 has also won over the city of Chicago, much the same way Dallas Green did with the Chicago Cubs. When both first arrived, it was easy to make the big men targets of frustrations with the franchises and initial losing didn't help matters.

But the same Ditka who saw his front lawn "decorated" with toilet paper after a loss a couple of years ago is the man who people want to protect.

After an arrest of driving while intoxicated following a win against San Francisco, outraged fans bombarded state police with complaints that Ditka shouldn't have been stopped. That is the kind of loyalty Ditka is getting these days.

Outside of his calmer exterior lies a coach who is using his years as a player and as an assistant under Landry to the best use. No one will ever mistake him for the stoic Landry along the sidelines, but gone are the days when he berates players publicly on the field after a mistake.



Even now, Ditka exudes the fire which has made the 1985 Chicago Bears a winner. AP photo

Remarkable Raymond Berry

By Denne H. Freeman, AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — A tall, frail-looking guy appeared for spring football training at Southern Methodist University in 1952, and Lamar Hunt was amused. "This guy looked terrible," Hunt recalled. "Someone said that the skinny kid was one of our new ends. I said, 'Well, that's one guy I can beat out.'"

The skinny kid, it turned out, was Raymond Berry, now coach of the Super Bowl-bound New England Patriots. He put Hunt, the son of a billionaire, on the bench.

By taking different routes, both made it to the National Football League Hall of Fame (along with another SMU teammate, Forrest Gregg, now the Green Bay Packers coach) — Berry as one of the game's greatest pass receivers and Hunt as founder of the American Football League, which later merged with the NFL.

After the Pats beat the Miami Dolphins 31-14, Hunt presented the AFC championship trophy with his name on it to team owner Billy Sullivan and to Berry, the guy he couldn't beat out.

"I would never be surprised by anything Raymond achieved," Hunt said. "He is a remarkable person. He is one of the most self-made people I've ever seen."

Nevertheless, Hunt said he still finds it hard to believe Berry took the underdog Pats to their first-ever AFC title in his first full year as coach.

"He's very shy and not outgoing at all," Hunt said. "But he got the respect of the players. Some just barely know about him and his career, but it was his door opener. They respect him."

The son of a Paris, Texas, high school football coach, Berry arrived at SMU from Schriener Institute in Kerrville, Texas.

Nicknamed "ski foot" because of his large feet, Berry soon became known for his relentless work habits.

"He would practice, practice, practice. He was very fastidious. He's the first person I saw who wrapped his ankles," Hunt said.

Berry worked hours on his pass routes so he had everything down just right, and he cut up towels to make wristbands to keep his hands dry. Now almost every player in the NFL wears wristbands.

Hunt said Berry surprised people because "he just didn't look like a football player."

"He wore glasses. He was a studious-looking guy."

Hunt and Berry didn't socialize much because they were "sort of competitors," Hunt said. But the slight 6-foot-1, 188-pound Berry made a big impression on his SMU teammates.

Said the 1954 press guide: "In a tribute to Berry's leadership, he was chosen co-captain even though he never started a game."

And Hunt said Berry, who went to the Baltimore Colts as a 12th-round draft pick, was a terror on defense.

"In those days, you had to go both ways, and he was a great defensive end," Hunt said. "He never really caught that many passes because we didn't throw the ball very much."

With Berry's leadership under Coach Woody Woodard, SMU came within a missed extra point of a Cotton Bowl berth in 1954. A 13-13 tie against Texas cost the Mustangs.

"It hurt ... but you couldn't tell with Raymond. He never showed excitement and he never showed despair," Hunt said.

Even today, nothing seems to shake Berry.

"On the sideline against Miami, he looked just about like I always remembered him at SMU — calm and studying his notes," Hunt said.

Bears long for respectability

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Bears wanted to send a few words of encouragement to the New England Patriots prior to leaving earlier this week for New Orleans, site of Sunday's Super Bowl.

"We're not supermen or anything of that nature," said defensive back Dave Duerson.

"We're not invincible," said linebacker Otis Wilson.

"We didn't run all over them the first time we played them," offered quarterback Jim McMahon.

"New England's been playing great," insisted defensive end Richard Dent.

"That team is hungry and dangerous," warned linebacker Mike Singletary.

"Tony (Eason, the Patriots' quarterback) has matured a great deal," reasoned safety Gary Fencik.

"They're the best team I've seen on film," said Coach Mike Ditka.

Kind words, but they don't change the fact the Bears are heavily favored to beat the Cinderella Patriots.

The Bears waltzed through the NFL regular season with a 15-1 record, then shut out both playoff opponents en route to the Super Bowl. New England, on the other hand, was a wild-card team with an 11-5 record and had to win three playoff games on the road.

Both teams are making their first appearances in the Super Bowl. They met during the second week of the season, with the Bears winning 20-7 at Chicago.

With the National Football League's top defense and top rushing attack, the Bears scored 456 points and yielded a league-low 198 this season. New England scored 362 and allowed 290.

The Patriots have a superior running game, with Craig James rushing for 1,227 yards and Tony Collins 657 during the season.

But the Bears have neutralized some of the best rushers in the league. In the playoffs, they knocked Joe Morris of the New York Giants out of the game early, after he gained just 32 yards. The Los Angeles Rams' Eric Dickerson could gain only 46 yards in 17 carries.

"I don't know if we can play any better on defense," said Ditka.

In the regular season game, they also sacked Eason six times, and intercepted three of his passes, part of their NFL-high 34 interceptions.

No team has ever registered a shutout in the Super Bowl.

"It's always in our defense's mind," said defensive tackle William "The Refrigerator" Perry, of a possible shutout.

Although the Bears are the youngest team in the NFC, averaging 25.1 years old, they are led by a pair of veterans, running back Walter Payton and Fencik, who have waited over a decade for their chance at a Super Bowl ring.

"I can't think of any worse feeling than going to the Super Bowl and losing the game," said Fencik, a 10-year veteran who led the Bears with 118 tackles. The seemingly ageless Payton, in his 11th season, rushed for 1,551 yards.

Observers have noted repeatedly this season that the Bears, with their great cast of characters, have brought fun back to the NFL. That won't change in New Orleans.

"We're going to party some, enjoy it," Fencik said. "But the real partying will take place afterwards."

Pats: Togetherness

'I've seen John Hannah smiling more than I've ever seen him smile.'

Robert Weathers

By Howard Ulman
AP Sports Writer

FOXBORO — Two weeks ago, about a dozen New England Patriots' players and their wives feasted at a famous Boston seafood restaurant.

Offensive guard John Hannah, often praised for his individual greatness but never on a winning playoff team in his first 12 seasons in the National Football League, was among them.

"We ate and acted like we were Rockefeller down there and he picked the tab up," said running back Craig James. "I said, 'thank you,' and he said, 'No, thank you.' That meant a lot to me, knowing he's happy."

The dinner followed the Patriots' second playoff victory of the season, over the Los Angeles Raiders.

It has been a season in which, Patriots' players say, there is more togetherness and feeling for each other than there has been in years.

"We see each other as being a room full of brothers," said free safety Fred Marion. "We fight for each other and we cry for each other. That's the way you have to be to be champions."

The Patriots embarked this week on their last journey toward that goal when they left for New Orleans, where they will seek their fourth consecutive playoff upset, against the Chicago Bears in next Sunday's Super Bowl.

It has been a remarkable journey from the ill-fated reign of Ron Meyer, who was fired midway through last season. During his 2½ years as coach, unhappy players grumbled about him and traveled, according to one of his rules, on separate buses for the offense and defense.

"The teams that get close and are a unit and a family are the teams that win and that's what we are right now," James said. "We're not as much a defense and offense. It's more a mingling. There's not a lot of little groups."

Before Raymond Berry succeeded Meyer, "the guys would hang with either (teammates who played) their position or other players they had things in common with," said wide receiver Cedric Jones.

"But this year, with coach Berry, he emphasizes putting the team before yourself, an unselfish type of attitude. I think we've formed a type of brotherhood, a cohesiveness that we didn't have before as players and it's fun to be around because guys really care about each other."

Being concerned about teammates and unconcerned about personal glory has helped the Patriots on the field, said running back Robert Weathers.

"Players are more relaxed in situations that normally they would be a little tense in because they'd be thinking about their own success," he said.

"You can't play with somebody you don't like," said Jones, "and you've got to like the man that you play for and I think everybody likes Coach Berry.

"When Raymond started taking over the job, he was talking about a family and relationship among players and we would have to have that if we were going to be a championship club."

Weathers said a telltale sign of the new togetherness is that veteran players who "are set in their ways" are part of it.

"I've seen John Hannah smiling more than I've ever seen him smile," he added. "I'm sure that has a lot to do with us winning."

Center Pete Brock said players on the bench now are cheering more for their teammates on the field, but he isn't sure whether the winning led to that unity or vice versa.

"It's like the old question: what came first, the chicken or the egg?" said Brock. "I'm not sure of that answer yet but I know that we have won."

Many of the ingredients needed for that success were here before this season. The Patriots have been known for having excellent talent.

"You can have all the talent in the world but if you're not together and you don't have the desire and the leadership, then you're not going anywhere," said James. "Right now we have all it takes to be the Super Bowl champions."

It's easy to label a group that has reached that stage after falling short for so many years as a "Cinderella" team, but Hannah said it's not quite that clear-cut.

It's just that the Patriots now have someone, Berry, who showed them the way to the ball.

"It depends on what you mean by Cinderella," Hannah said. "Cinderella had a lot of dirty clothes, but she was the same person inside with her dirty clothes as she was with her gown on."

What to expect

By Murray Olderman

NEW ORLEANS (NEA) — The Chicago Bears and the New England Patriots each rely on strong defense and stolid, almost dull offense to hammer their NFL foes. Which means Super Bowl XX should be a close, physical, low-scoring game.

The Chicago defense will be the ultimate factor in a Bear victory — my pick: Chicago 20, New England 10.

"I don't think anybody can compare to the Bear defense," says coach Joe Walton of the AFC New York Jets, who played and lost to both teams this season.

In an era when many teams are going to three-man fronts and multiple coverages, the Bears stick to a primary 4-3-4 alignment. Richard Dent, the leading pass rusher, is at right end; rookie William Perry and Steve McMichael are at the tackles; Dan Hampton is at left end. But defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan has tried to confuse offenses by switching occasionally to a three-man front, rushing linebackers Otis Wilson and Wilber Marshall from the outside.

The Bears do a lot of stunting up front and mix up their blitzes. With so much manpower trying to get to the passer, the Bears' secondary plays more man-to-man defenses than most teams. It relies on LC Mike Richardson and RC Leslie Frazier to go head-to-head with the wide receivers. SS Dave Duerson made the Pro Bowl in his first year as a regular, and FS Gary Fencik is a heavy hitter.

The hub of the Chicago defense is rambunctious MLB Mike Singletary, who seems to be in on every tackle. But like Sam Huff a generation ago, he benefits from the protective cover of the 4-3, designed to keep blockers off him. The most active of the Bear defenders, the one who really disrupts a game's pattern, is strong-side linebacker Wilson — even more than sack leader Dent.

A key to the New England offense will be Tony Eason at quarterback. It's imperative that he have a good day, throwing quick-release passes that might spring WRs Stanley Morgan and Stephen Starring against the tight coverage. Eason also has two reliable tight ends, Lin Dawson and Derrick Ramsey.

RB Tony Collins, restored to starting status, was the team's leading receiver in the standard two-setback formation that the Patriots favor.

The heavy-duty running back, second in Patriot history to gain more than 1,000 yards, is Craig James, a smart, north-south ball carrier with good vision. The Pats sub a running tandem: Robert Weathers and Mosi Tatupu.

On passing downs, when they change to a shotgun formation, New England will sometime cross up the defense with forward handoffs to James or Collins.

In pass formations, the Patriots frequently double the wide receivers on one side of the field, even putting them behind one another.

But the Pats got where they are by running the ball, and that's going to be tough against Chicago. The equalizer to the Bears' disruptive defense could be a fine Pat offensive line, led by LG John Hannah and LT Brian Holloway.

Defensively, New England relies primarily on a three-man front: 38-year-old RE Julius Adams, NT Lester Williams and rookie LE Garin Veris.

For maximum pressure on the quarterback, they'll rush both OLBs: Andre Tippett from the left, Don Blackmon from the right. Tippett, a super All-Pro, was named top defender in the NFL in '85. A strong secondary also features CBs Raymond Clayborn and Ronnie Lippett, plus FS Fred Marion.

The big problem for New England will be to contain Chicago QB Jim McMahon, whose mobility is the great factor in his success. More than RB Walter Payton, McMahon's the vital cog in the Bears' offense: Payton is a great player, but he doesn't dominate a game.

Because of McMahon's versatility and WRs Dennis McKinnon and Willie Gault, the Bears don't have a predictable offense. McKinnon catches better in traffic; but sprinter Gault should thrive on the Superdome's fast carpet.

Most of the running plays for Payton are now tailored out of the I formation. McMahon will also throw on first down and go to the shotgun on passing downs. He isn't afraid to take off when he sees an open lane.

Leading Chicago's offensive line: center Joel Hilgenberg and left tackle Jimbo Covert. But a pair of young guards, Mark Bortz and Tom Thayer, rate extra credit for their run-blocking.

For both teams, the kicking games are fairly even. Barefoot field-goal kicker Tony Franklin is deadly at short range for the Pats; Kevin Butler is slightly stronger for the Bears.

The loss of WR-KR Irving Fryar, injured in a domestic squabble, hurt New England's kick-return unit as well as its passing game. Gault of Chicago is a kick-return threat for the Bears.

Running back Kevin Rollins

Rollins, Mosby, Hillis DCL 'stars

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

Senior halfback Kevin Rollins, senior linebacker David Mosby, and junior guard John Hillis were recently named to represent Newton South High School on the annual Dual County League football all-star roster.

Rollins was among a host of talented running backs this season in the DCL and shared all-star honors with senior Glenn Smith of Lincoln-Sudbury, and junior sensations Herman Rice of Bedford and Tom Dretler of Wayland.

Mosby, South's stocky defensive star and talented fullback, was listed as one of four down linemen although he starred more as a linebacker.

Hillis was the lone junior named to the all-star team's offensive line, which included heavyweights Paul Toomey of Boston Latin and Jay Gabbe of Lincoln-Sudbury.

Interestingly, all four of the defensive backs on the dream team came from L-S or C-C.

Boston Latin placed five players on the roster and Wayland named four to the team. Newton South, Bedford, and Acton-Boxboro all had three players on the squad. In all, 35 players were chosen — 17 on offense and 18 on defense.

Newton South's selections:

Kevin Rollins - In seven games this season, Rollins rushed for 890 yards to finish his career with a school-record 2,575 yards. South Coach Art Kojoyian said he could not remember anyone ever coming close to Rollins' mark.

Week in and week out, opposing coaches let it be known that their main concern in playing the Lions was Rollins.

"The key to beating South is to stop Rollins," said Madison Park head coach Bill Thomas early in the season.

Acton-Boxboro Coach Ed Leary echoed Thomas' words, and Rollins replied with a stunning 186-yard rushing performance with two touchdowns.

When Rollins was not breaking for that big run, the senior was sticking somebody on defense from his linebacker spot.

"He is an outstanding defensive player," said Kojoyian of Rollins. "He's got a real abilty to stop the run. He's just got a nose for the ball."

David Mosby - South's leading tackler, Mosby teamed with Rollins and junior Rob Hillis to form a keen linebacking crew.

Described by Kojoyian as a "steady and dependable" player, Mosby "really came into his own this year and performed as expected."

Primarily a blocking back last season, the 230-pound Mosby started carrying the ball this year with much success.

Mosby carried 97 times for 474 yards, second on the team in rushing behind Rollins.

John Hillis - Only a junior, Hillis will be a major part of South's offensive line next year. With a good year and plenty of steady time behind him, Hillis could be in the running for an all-star spot again in 1986.

"He'll be bigger," Kojoyian said of the 190-pounder. "He could be well over 200 pounds."

Much of Mosby's sucess can be attributed to Hillis' blocking. An "excellent" trap blocker, Hillis opened the gates for many of Mosby's strolls.

Tiger six puts away Waltham

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

WATERTOWN — If this had been the first game of the season, it would have been a major upset. But Newton North isn't sneaking up on anyone anymore, so Wednesday's 3-1 hockey victory over Waltham shouldn't have surprised a soul.

North coach Jack Heavey wasn't sure his club would win a game when the year started, but here he sits with an 8-2 record (3-0 in the Suburban League).

Though Waltham has had trouble scoring all season, some of the credit (or blame, depending upon your viewpoint) for this one should go to North goalie Chuck Goldman. The sophomore came up with yet another strong performance, stopping 30 Hawk shots. By the time Marty Provencher put one by him, only 2:33 remained in the game.

Waltham may have started fast and finished fast, but the middle belonged to Newton North and that's where the game was won.

The Tigers iced it with two third-period goals, but the tide had turned much earlier than that. Maguire blamed it on two consecutive bad shifts early in the second which "gave them (North) confidence. They were all over us after that."

The only reason the score was only 1-0 after that frame was Don Archibald. He made 10 of his 20 saves in that period, several of which were big ones.

He was beaten once. The Tigers were trying to break out of their own zone with a pass up to Joe Proia at the blue line. Waltham defenseman Jeff Lazaro lined him up and leveled him, trying to keep the puck in. Proia went down, but the puck popped outside the zone to a waiting Jay Cappello. With the referee's arm up for a delayed elbowing call on Lazaro, Cappello streaked down the right wing and ripped off a shot from the top of the faceoff circle that broke off Archibald's stick side and trickled into the net.

Though Waltham held a 13-5 edge in shots in the third period, it was Newton which put the game away. Rick DeSimone finished off a pretty 3-on-1 to make it 2-0 in the first two minutes of the frame.

Greg Burke carried the puck in on the break as Hawk blueliner Mark Bourgeois tried to hold the fort alone. Burke drew him out to the side, then flipped a soft pass across in front to DeSimone. The senior had nothing but net to shoot at.

Lazaro was in the box for interference when the Tigers put it out of sight. Sixteen seconds after he went in, Tim Weaver picked up Rob Arone's rebound (shot from the right point) and flipped it over Archibald.

Boxers derail Tiger girls

With Carolyn Natale out with an injured shoulder, Brockton went right to work double-teaming Carol Ventura on Friday, and the result was Newton North's first girls' basketball loss of the year. Ventura still managed to score 25 points, but the Boxers came away with a 55-51 victory.

Though the Tigers kept fighting back, the game was lost in the first quarter when Brockton shot out to a 14-4 lead. The double-team shut down Ventura, and at the other end the Boxers were able to break the Newton North press.

"They were prepared for us," said North coach Irene Cucina. "We were shooting, but it wasn't going in."

The Tigers settled down and played the Boxers even in the second quarter, but after halftime, they were "a new team," according to the coach. "We played great."

By the end of the third quarter, North had cut a 10-point deficit down to six, and that continued into the fourth. Ventura finally hit a pair of free throws to put the Tigers ahead for the first time, 51-50, but the comeback ran out of gas at that point and Brockton took control down the stretch.

Ann Meng scored 12 points filling in up front for Natale, while Jen Heesch and Megan Morahan played well on defense.

The summary:

Superdome manager:

Politicians stay home

By Austin Wilson
AP Sports Writer

NEW ORLEANS — The best way to ensure a trouble-free Super Bowl is for highly visible politicians — like Boston Mayor Ray Flynn or Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis — to follow President Reagan's lead and sit home to watch the game on television, said the man who runs the Louisiana Superdome.

The day Jimmy Carter visited the Sugar Bowl to watch Georgia win the national college football championship five years ago is still remembered as the worst game-related experience ever endured by the staff and patrons of the 10-year-old, $163 million sports palace.

For security reasons, Interstate 10 and the streets around the Superdome were blocked for an hour before the game and again well after the game was over. Traffic jams reached into the city's suburbs.

"We had people getting into the game in the third quarter," recalled Cliff Wallace of HMC Management, the company that has run the Superdome for the state since 1980.

Elevators were blocked before and after the game, and a lot of box suite owners had terrible times getting through Secret Service checkpoints and into their seats near the luxury box where Carter sat.

"Let me tell you the biggest problem for a management company for an event like the Super Bowl. It's our national or even state figure who needs or wants undue special attention," Wallace said.

"We don't have time for that. Our primary interest is the 75,000 people paying to see this event. The last thing we need is some senator coming down on a bus wanting special parking and special consideration for his party."

"The best advice I could give to President Reagan or Vice President George Bush or anyone else who requires special attention is that they'd be a lot more comfortable watching it on television in front of their fire. And our 75,000 people would be more comfortable."

Reagan has already said he won't be at the game. He's scheduled for a five-minute interview from the White House during the two-hour pregame show.

Experience, planning and hard work will take care of other problems, Wallace said. It's the sixth Super Bowl for New Orleans, the third since the Superdome opened in 1975. The 1970, 1972 and 1975 Super Bowls were in since-demolished Tulane Stadium, the 1978 and 1981 games in the dome.

The first one in the dome was the roughest.

The state was running the stadium then, and patrons complained of surly and uninformed ushers, haphazard security and filth. And that was with the stadium putting on its best face for the National Football League's glamor event.

A squabble over the Superdome's 64 box suites threatened for a while to move the 1978 game elsewhere. The NFL wanted control of all the Superdome's seats, but the suite owners didn't want to give up their leases. It was the first Super Bowl played in a stadium with leased sky boxes, and the procedures hadn't been ironed out.

The compromise reached in that game is now written into New Orleans' bid proposals.

Half of the box suites go to the NFL, and the owners share the other 32, Wallace said. "As manager of this building, I have to recognize box suite ownership," he said. "We'll always maintain a position of trying to help them in this building. But if the box suite owner is subleasing, the sympathy is less."

The biggest suites, those with room for 29, lease for $25,000 a year. The smallest, with seating capacity of 18, go for $15,000 annually. There's strong pressure on an owner to turn a quick one-day profit by sub-leasing, Wallace said.

"You get a multi-million dollar company in Chicago, and $50,000-$60,000 to entertain clients is tempting," he said.

In general, a Super Bowl is among the easiest of big events to handle, Wallace said.

"I don't want to sound like I'm degrading the Super Bowl in any way, but it is not that much of a problem to us as compared to the Sugar Bowl or a big concert," Wallace said. "The Sugar Bowl is more of a problem because of the competitive atmosphere. You don't have people trying to run onto the field to tear down the goal posts at a Super Bowl.

"The Super Bowl is more of a formal event for us in providing services. The major difference is that the NFL wants the infinite tuning. They want the building to look good and run well. They worry about the smallest details.

"The people who come to a Super Bowl are executives and owners — high-income people. You don't get the rowdy groups with six packs under their arms.

"You don't have tailgate parties in the parking lots."

Even problems of traffic control are reduced, he said, because the preponderance of the crowd walks from nearby hotels or travels by taxi.

But nothing is left to chance, he said. A weeks-long program of staff re-education climaxed last week in a training session for some 600 people who will handle crowd management, concessions, cleanup and the like.

A new $13 million system of electronic signs goes into effect inside the stadium to assist in directing the crowd to seats and services.

It's more than worth the extra trouble, Wallace said, even though the Super Bowl doesn't make the money for the stadium that other major events might.

"The biggest plus is the national exposure. Millions of people see the stadium and the city, and those millions include artists' management people, promoters and other potential lessors of the building. You can't buy that kind of advertising," he said.

In the past year, he said, the Superdome has been used for the Sugar Bowl, a sports festival, an insurance company convention, and a giant bingo game. The arena floor was covered with dirt for a truck and tractor pull, then emptied again for a computer exhibit, a gymnastics meet and memorial services.

"Hopefully," Wallace said, "the building is presented as more than a sports palace — as a multi-purpose palace."

Party time in cajun country

By Austin Wilson
AP Sports Writer

The motto may be, "Laissez les bon temps rouler" ("Let the good times roll"), but the kicker is, "Don't forget your credit cards."

NEW ORLEANS — New Orleans wears its reputation as "The City That Care Forgot" like rouge on the party face it presents to the world.

But there's cold-eyed commercialism behind that facade as the bawdy old river town prepares for Super Bowl XX.

The motto may be, "Laissez les bon temps rouler" ("Let the good times roll"), but the kicker is, "Don't forget your credit cards."

The city's 26,000 hotel rooms are booked for the National Football League championship game, the sort of business expected but never realized from last year's World's Fair.

To find a room, try Baton Rouge, 80 miles north, or the Mississippi Gulf Coast, 80 miles southeast.

Or bargain with some of the local residents, who were renting their houses and apartments for the big game between the Chicago Bears and the New England Patriots in the Louisiana Superdome.

Lloyd Camp rented his French Quarter apartment for $200 a night. D.E. Hale wanted $800 a night for his place, but was toying with lowering the price. Jerry Caniglia was asking $150 a night for his apartment in suburban Metairie.

Dinner at Antoine's? Sorry, booked. Dinner at Commander's Palace? Sorry, booked. A leisurly breakfast at Brennan's on Super Bowl Sunday? Sorry, booked, unless you're willing to show up before 8 a.m.

But with 2,500 restaurants within 50 miles of the French Quarter and downtown business district, there's no reason for anyone to be hungry.

Nor does anyone need to go thirsty because of the long line waiting to get into Pat O'Brien's, the popular sing-along bar in the French Quarter. There are hundreds of bars and lounges in the immediate vicinity of the half-mile-wide old section of town.

Beverly Gianna, public relations director of the Greater New Orleans Tourist and Convention Commission, said the expected 70,000 Super Bowl visitors should pump an estimated $100 million into the local economy. Cliff Wallace, who runs the 71,330-seat Louisiana Superdome, is even more optimistic. He's counting on 100,000 people to spend $150 million.

In an area where unemployment hovers around 11 percent, those are exciting numbers.

Lakefront Airport expects as many as 800 private jets to use its field, said Jerry McKinney, assistant director of aviation. Another 200 to 300 planes are expected at New Orleans International and some smaller airports.

"You're looking at well over a thousand airplanes, plus charters, and we don't have any idea what the charters would be," he said.

The Amtrak train called the City of New Orleans is sold out for its southbound odyssey from Chicago. Another train, The Crescent, was quickly filling up and will make an extra run from New York to New Orleans on Jan. 24, said Debbie Marciniak, an Amtrak spokeswoman.

She said more than a dozen private railroad cars will also use Amtrak rails to roll into Super Bowl city.

Generally, January weather in New Orleans is perfect for strolling and crowd watching along Bourbon Street. The average daytime high is 62 degrees, with nighttime lows of 45.

But the weather is unpredictable. The record high temperature for Jan. 26 — Super Bowl Sunday — is 81; the record low 22. Visitors to the 1975 Super Bowl, the last one played here before the Superdome opened, will remember shirtsleeve weather turning freezing and wet hours before the game.

Super Bowl tickets may still be available — at a price. Travel agents have offered trips nearly anywhere in exchange for tickets — perfectly legal barter, police said. A man in Jefferson Parish was arrested for scalping, however, when he offered a pair of ducats to an undercover agent for $1,200.

The New Orleans Saints, as host team, got 7,000 tickets. Team spokesman Rusty Kasmiersky said 1,000 went back to the league and 3,000 to lucky season ticket-holders.

Each member of the team and staff got a pair of tickets, and Kasmiersky said he had no idea of how owner Tom Benson Jr. split up the rest.

He agreed that if Mayor Ernest Morial or Gov. Edwin Edwards wanted a few they probably got them, since they were instrumental in arranging tax breaks and incentives to get the game here.

New Orleans police, tolerant of unusual behavior with Mardi Gras and Sugar Bowl crowds, say they don't expect problems from the older, more sedate Super Bowl visitors.

"It's not the same sort of party crowd we get for Mardi Gras, the Sugar Bowl or New Year's Eve," one police sergeant said. "They're all your more affluent types, executives. They're people with money."

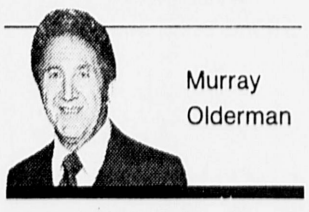
Beauty matches up with the beast



Murray Olderman

NEW ORLEANS (NEA) — The Chicago Bears are, and should be, strong favorites to win Super Bowl XX and duplicate the 18-1 record of the San Francisco 49ers last season as the dominant team in the National Football League.

But the Cinderella surge of the New England Patriots to the AFC title leaves room for doubt about the outcome. If they upset the NFC champion Bears, the Patriots would be only the second wild-card team to win the Vince Lombardi Trophy — the other was the Los Angeles Raiders in Super Bowl XV.

The Bears-Pats showdown on Jan. 26 at the Louisiana Superdome — before 76,000 spectators paying $75 each — will be telecast nationally by NBC at 5 p.m. EST. NBC expects about 116 million Americans to watch on TV.

It's the first Super Bowl appearance for both the Bears and the Patriots. Neither has been in a league title game since 1963. The Bears won the NFL championship that December; the Patriots, meanwhile, were demolished by San Diego in the old AFL's championship game.

There is a tangible guide in comparing the Bears and Patriots — their '85 regular-season, second-week meeting in Chicago. The Bears controlled the action and won 20-7, allowing the Patriots to get beyond midfield for only two plays. But the Patriots, and particularly quarterback Tony Eason, have progressed considerably since that early learning experience.

Chicago went 15-1 in '85 to win the NFC Central Division title with the league's best regular-season record. In the playoffs, the Bears shutout the New York Giants, 21-0, and the Los Angeles Rams, 24-0. New England was an AFC East also-ran at 11-5. In the playoffs (all on the road), it beat the New York Jets, 26-14, the Los Angeles Raiders, 27-20, and the Miami Dolphins, 31-14.

The AFC holds a 12-7 edge over the NFC in Super Bowl confrontations.

The AFC also tends to play more exciting football generally, except in the case of the Patriots: Head coach Raymond Berry has toned down New England's offense to concentrate on a running attack and low-risk passes.

The remarkable turnaround of the Patriots, who as recently as 1981 won only two games, has to be credited to the soft-spoken Berry, chosen after the controversial Ron Meyer was dismissed in the middle of the 1984 season.

Berry acts dumfounded about the Patriots' ascendancy to Super Bowl class — "I'm still numb." But their emergence as a solid team is attributable to the confidence he instilled in them and to his methodical system of football.

Berry was that way himself as a Hall of Fame player with the Baltimore Colts in the 1950s, a wide receiver with limited physical ability.

The Patriot franchise had been recognized as talent-laden since Chuck Fairbanks revived it with his organizational skill in the 1970s. He produced playoff appearances in 1976 and 1978, but he couldn't reach the Super Bowl.

Dick Steinberg, an astute personnel man, added the final touches to New England's talent stockpile with such recruits as Andre Tippett, Fred Marion, Ken Sim, Eason, Craig James, Ronnie Lippett and Irving Fryar.

If in style (though not necessarily in personality) the Patriots reflect their coach, so do the tough, intense Chicago Bears.

Chicago's Mike Ditka, like the coach who'll be on the other side of the Superdome turf, was an outstanding pro receiver. But Ditka, unlike precise Berry, was a rugged, physical tight end. As an ex-Bears star, Ditka played for the Dallas Cowboys when Berry was an assistant coach in 1969.

When George Halas brought fiery Ditka back to Chicago to take over the Bears as head coach in the strike-interrupted 1982 season, some wondered if he could keep enough of a rein on himself to control a complex pro football squad.

After starting slowly (3-6 in '82, 8-8 in '83), Ditka had the Bears (10-6 in '84) on track with an NFC Central Division title last year, losing to the San Francisco 49ers in the NFC championship game.

This year, Chicago — with a defense that has destroyed virtually every opponent, limiting the scoring to 10 points or under in 13 games — has become the dominant team in all of football.

Ditka has been smart and pliant enough to handle Jim McMahon, an eccentric quarterback who will occasionally defy, and to produce an opportunistic offense that showcases the great Walter Payton at running back. The hype in win-starved Chicago, especially the popuarity of unique rookie William "The Refrigerator" Perry, hasn't distracted Ditka — or affected his control of the team.

Both Berry and Ditka have also been astute enough to surround themselves with competent, experienced coaching staffs. New England's Rod Rust hasn't received as much publicity as Chicago's Buddy Ryan, but he has been equally facile in deploying his defensive talent.

NFL '85 (Second Week): Sunday, Sept. 15

CHICAGO 20, NEW ENGLAND 7— At Soldier Field, attendance 60,533. The Bears took advantage of four Patriot miscues to defeat the Patriots and maintain a share of first place in the NFC Central. Jim McMahon's 32-yard touchdown pass to Dennis McKinnon and Kevin Butler's 21-yard field goal gave the Bears a 10-0 halftime edge. Mike Singletary registered three of the Bear's six sacks. Patriot QB Tony Eason's 90-yard scoring strike to Craig James in the fourth quarter set a Soldier Field record to prevent a shutout. Chicago held a 37:25 to 22:35 time of possession advantage over New England.

Pats arrive amidst hoopla

FOXBORO (AP) — Bourbon Street or the Bears?

The New England Patriots arrived in New Orleans Monday with that choice to make, a choice they expect will be easy.

"It's a big time full of hoopla and lots of distractions," said wide receiver Greg Hawthorne, "but you've got to put it in perspective. You're there to play ball and not to get too crazy."

The Patriots begin practicing in New Orleans Tuesday for the first Super Bowl in their 26-year history. Four of their players who will face the Chicago Bears next Sunday have played in previous National Football League title games.

Hawthorne was with the Pittsburgh Steelers when they won the 1980 Super Bowl. Tight end Derrick Ramsey was on the Oakland Raiders in the 1981 contest when they beat the Philadelphia Eagles, who had place-kicker Tony Franklin and center Guy Morriss.

Morriss said the media crush that will bear down on the players can be irksome and he advises them to "just relax. It can be a pain but, let's face it, we'd rather be answering questions (than be out of it) ... It's a pleasure to be there."

Franklin describes the week of news conferences and bustling hotel lobbies in a lively city like New Orleans, where he played in the 1981 Super Bowl, as "mass hysteria." But he thinks the Patriots will cope well with the distractions even though it's the first time for most of them.

"We realize that it's taken a lot of hard work and we're just going to go down there with a sense of purpose," he said. "It's not really that easy to get distracted when you've got somebody that's as good as the Bears that you're going to be playing."

One thing the Patriots won't have to adjust to is life on the road in an attractive city. They arrived in Los Angeles five days before their 27-20 playoff victory over the Raiders Jan. 5 and in Miami four days before their 31-14 triumph over the Dolphins Jan. 12 in the AFC championship game.

"It'll be no crazier than in the past," said Ramsey. "I think the Miami game was great for them as far as how things are going to be" in New Orleans.

The players will be on their own after practices, which are expected to end by about 4:30 p.m. the next four days. Their curfew is 11 p.m. each night except Friday, when they must be in their rooms by midnight.

Ramsey isn't crazy about the city anyway.

"What is there to do? I was bored stiff while I was down there," he said. "I mean, if it were a city like Los Angeles or New York or something like that, then it would be (distracting).

"To me Bourbon Street, after living in California and you go on Broadway in San Francisco, same show," he added. "This is the last game and if you find something that attractive you'll have four months to see it. There are priorities."

The big show will be Sunday's Super Bowl, and the Patriots aren't in a mood to do anything that would keep them from having their best chance of success.

"There may be a few guys a little excited and it's a time to be excited," said Hawthorne. "It's an opportunity that so many players never get ... They realize that and I think Coach (Raymond) Berry has explained a lot of that to them. You never know when you're going to come back around and get this opportunity again. You have to go out and take care of business."

'It's a big time full of hoopla and lots of distractions. But you've got to put it in perspective. You're there to play ball and not to get too crazy.'

SMITH CORONA

FINALLY, PERSONAL WORD PROCESSING A PERSON CAN AFFORD

PWP System 12

The Smith Corona PWP System 12 and your Smith Corona computer-compatible typewriter* combine as a complete word processor. It performs every function you need for writing, editing and printing. Every familiar keyboard feature of your typewriter integrates into the word processing system through one cable.

These features include WordEraser,™ single character correction, auto centering and underscoring; and if your typewriter has the Spell-Right™ dictionary option, PWP System 12 will even proofread your text as you type.

See these professional features of the PWP

- High quality 12" monitor with 80 characters x 24 line display
- Built-in menu that lists action choices and guides you every step of the way
- 64,000 character working memory, approximately 32 text pages
- Unlimited storage memory with Microwafers — capacity 64,000 characters
- Hand sized keypad with only seven command keys and five cursor keys. It manages your entire system. You can quickly locate to any point in your text, edit it, delete it, add to it, store it, recall it and move it about.

Bears quarterback Jim McMahon attempts to disengage himself from autograph hounds after arriving in Champaign, Ill.

Fun times in that toddlin' town

By James Litke
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — Arrrrrrrrrrrgh. Hogs crying, gangsters dying, running backs lying on the ground in pain. Chicago's kind of sounds.

New beat heard on the street.

"We're not here to start no trouble."

"We're just here to do the Super Bowl shuffle."

Bears.

"Ours is a one-syllable town," writes author Studs Terkel in a recent essay about his kind of town. "Its character has been molded by the muscle rather than the word."

The Chicago Bears are the muscle today. Al Capone was yesterday.

"Arrrrrrrrrrrgh," though, remains the word.

It was what National Football League ball carriers and quarterbacks said all season long — what Capone's competitors used to say — when they met the muscle.

In places where no English is spoken, people still think they know something about Chicago.

"Shee-ca-go. Al Capone," they smile, hands thrust forward, thumbs arched, index fingers pointed out. "Rat-a-tat-tat."

But wherever people do speak English, they are learning new things about Chicago.

"Football is what Europeans think America is all about ... powerful, big, brash, dynamic, larger than life. And the Bears are football over here," said Bob (no relation to Walter) Payton, an expatriate who has enjoyed phenomenal success in London with a string of Chicago-style pizza and rib restaurants.

"Everyone here knows who William "The Refrigerator" Perry is, and he's something of a folk hero as well," said Payton, host for the tape-delayed "NFL Game of the Week" on Sky Channel, a European cable television network with some five million subscribers.

"I've been shoving the Bears down Europe's throat all season long, and their making it to the Super Bowl has put a different image of the city in people's minds.

"The 'Euro-yuppies' who identify with America know that Capone is not what the city's about anymore," he said. "But they still tune in to the power.

"They don't much understand that a defensive tackle doesn't play on offense, or have any notion what offsides means. But when they saw Perry move that Packer out of the way with such ease ... when they see the 'Super Bowl Shuffle,' they relate to the show biz of it all."

Chicago gone show biz?

"I wouldn't worry about that," Terkel said. "This team fits the city's image. Blue-collar, defensive, hustling, powerful. But there is also a certain nimbleness to it, the nimbleness of the fat man (Perry), the nimbleness of a city moving."

Chicago hasn't been "Hog Butcher to the World" for decades, and it hasn't worked quite as well as it did since Mayor Richard J. Daley died in 1975, leaving his successors in a different era with no instructions on how to run a monarchy.

Chicago's packing houses and steel mills are shuttered, the advantages of its rail hub neutralized by trucks and planes, and even the heroic "Big Shoulders" that so impressed poet Carl Sandburg are drooping noticeably under the burdens that crush urban centers everywhere.

The city has seen its original "Monsters of the Midway," the great Amos Alonzo Stagg-coached University of Chicago teams of the 1930s, reduced to a Division III also-ran.

And no one ever thought George Halas, who helped found the National Football League and ran the club like his personal duchy for 64 years, would go away.

Except maybe Halas.

Owner, coach, even player for the Bears, he died in 1983, as tyrannical and full of grand plans at 88 as he was at 18. Months before his death, he named Mike Ditka as the coach, guaranteeing the Bears would be as mean in his absence as they were in his presence.

Seeing the New York Giants come out wearing sneakers for the second half of the 1934 NFL championship because of the frozen ground, Halas instructed his players to step on Giant toes.

Some 30 years later, when former Bear defender Doug Atkins failed by every other means to impress on Halas how much he hated to practice, Atkins turned up in the stands during one such session and began firing at pigeons with a shotgun.

Halas pretended he didn't notice.

These Bears are those Bears in every way.

Except these Bears dance.

"We're just here to do the Super Bowl shuffle."

Arrrrrrrrrrrgh.

F. Errol Dickey, III

WESTWOOD - F. Errol Dickey, III, Realtor, has been awarded the Certified Real Estate Brokerage Manager (CRB) designation by the REALTORS NATIONAL MARKETING INSTITUTE, an affiliate of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS. Mr. Dickey already holds the Graduate of the Realtors Institute (GRI) designation awarded by the Massachusetts Association of Realtors.

The award was announced during the Marketing Institute meetings held in conjunction with the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS Annual Convention held in New Orleans, Louisiana November 6-12, 1985, which Mr. Dickey attended.

The CRB designation recognizes individuals who have achieved the highest level of knowledge in real estate brokerage management and marketing. The individuals who have earned the designation have completed certain real estate marketing and management course requirements, met experience requirements, and demonstrated the application of brokerage management concepts in their everyday practice.

Dickey is President of Realty Associates of Westwood, Inc., at 936 High Street, Westwood, and principal of Metro-Boston Realtors, a new Boston brokerage firm opening in January 1986 with offices at Lewis Wharf on the Boston Waterfront. He is a member of the Greater Boston Board of REALTORS and the Massachusetts Association of REALTORS.

He is also a member of the Realty Guild, a cooperative group of the strongest independent real estate firms in Eastern Massachusetts, all recognized for their highest achievement in ethical, professional real estate practice.

As the major educational affiliate of the NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS, The REALTORS MARKETING INSTITUTE offers specialized real estate courses leading to three professional designations. The Institute is also known as a leading publisher of real estate texts and periodicals and is the source for real estate services and mult-media training programs for sales offices. G

Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority

Part-Time Bus Driver Lottery

The Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority will be conducting a lottery in February to select candidates for employment as Part-Time Bus Drivers. After an initial training period, Part-Time Drivers can expect to work up to a maximum of 30 hours per week at $10.19/hour. Basic qualifications include possession of a valid Massachusetts driver's license, and a good driving and work record. If your name is drawn, you will have to pass a written test, a physical exam and other pre-employment screening to be placed, by lottery number, on the list of qualified applicants. We expect that the list generated as a result of this lottery will be in use for approximately two (2) years.

To register, complete the form below, or a copy of it, and mail it to T-Lottery, Box P-3, South Dartmouth, MA 02748. Entries must be postmarked by Saturday, February 8, 1986. Do not call or visit the MBTA's offices to ask about your status. We will not be able to help you because we have hired an independent agency to conduct this lottery. Do not register more than once or you will be disqualified. After the lottery, those whose names were drawn will be notified.

The MBTA is an affirmative action/equal opportunity employer. The information relative to your sex, ethnicity or race is needed for our affirmative action reporting purposes.

UP YOURS.

Up Your Cost.
That can happen at other dealerships who advertise ridiculous financing "incentives" to buy their vehicles. What they don't tell you in the fine print is that they may have upped your purchase price to make money. After all, even car dealers have to eat. But at West End we don't eat our customers alive!

Up Your Expectations.
Perhaps you've seen a car advertised at an unbelievably low price. When you get to the showroom even basic options are expensive extras. At West End it's all in our ad--no hidden costs to spring on you later.

Up Your Anxiety
Some dealers even urge you to "shop by phone." At West End we appreciate the major investment this represents to you, and we're never too busy to demonstrate any vehicle and talk face to face with you about your purchase or lease.

Up Your Mistrust.
At West End we know that car fantasies are fun, but deception is another matter. We respect our customers too much to deal with them in a shoddy manner. We offer fair prices and honest deals.

Come to West End Chevrolet and let us up your satisfaction! We have over 200 new cars and trucks on our lot--plenty for you to choose from. We don't have huge advertising costs to cover. We're easy to deal with!

Also, 7.9% GMAC financing Annual Percentage Rate is still available on selected models. This offer will end Feb. 22, 1986, so come on over to West End and save.

Thomas E. Andrews

Owned Aftermarket Services, Hyannis

NEWTON CENTRE — A funeral service for Thomas E. Andrews of Newton Centre, will be held from the Mackay Funeral Home, 465 Centre St., Newton, Thursday at 9 a.m., with a mass of Christian burial at St. Ignatius Church, Chestnut Hill, at 10 a.m. Interment will follow at the Veterans Administration Massachusetts National Cemetery, Bourne, at 2 p.m.

Mr. Andrews died Sunday at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Brighton, after a brief illness.

Born in Boston, he had been a resident of Newton Centre for more than 24 years.

Mr. Andrews was the founder and owner of Aftermarket Services of Hyannis and district sales manager for Daubert Industries of Oak Brook, Ill.

He attended Mount Alvernia Academy and was a graduate of Boston English High School and of Boston College in 1954.

Mr. Andrews was an active member of the Boston College Alumni and had served with the Marine Corps during the Korean War.

He was a member of the U. S. Marine Corps League and the Capitol Marines.

Joseph Santillo, 84

Worked for Evans and Cable Co.

NEWTONVILLE — The funeral of Joseph Santillo, 84, of Newtonville, was held from the Andrew J. Magni Funeral Home, 365 Watertown St., Newton, Wednesday, followed by a funeral mass in Our Lady Help of Christians Church, Newton. Interment was in Calvary Cemetery, Waltham.

Mr. Santillo died Sunday at WalthamWeston Hospital.

A lifelong resident of Newton, Mr. Santillo had been a painter with the Evans and Cable Co. of Newton Upper Falls for 35 years.

He was a member of the Boston and Cambridge for the Deaf Society and of Our Lady Help of Christians Church, Newton.

The son of the late, Gaetano and Annina (DiRocco) Santillo and the brother of the late Benjamin and George Santillo, he leaves his sisters, Mrs. Lucy MacEwen of Newtonville and Virginia Terrasi of Lexington; several nieces and nephews, great nieces and nephews and a great-great niece.

Virginia (Luce) Russell, 84

NEWTON — The funeral of Virginia (Luce) Russell, 84, of Newton, a community and charity organizer for many years, was held Saturday in Grace Church, Newton. Burial was in Newton Cemetery, Newton Centre.

Mrs. Russell died last Wednesday in her home after a short illness.

She had been treasurer of the Eastern Diocese in the Episcopal Church and also was past president of the Francis Willard Organization and a member of the Colonial Dames and of the Mayflower Society.

She leaves her son, William B. of Lincoln; her sister, Dorothy Ochs of California and six grandchildren.

Support is sought for new ban on building

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Moratorium lobbyist Thomas Paulini last week compared the fate of his new petition to that of the New England Patriots.

"We are both underdogs," he said of the petitioners who are acting against what they see as overdevelopment in the Garden City, "and we both have the sentiment of the people."

Addressing a capacity crowd in City Hall's aldermanic chambers, Paulini was referring to the 2-1 vote in favor of a non-binding ballot question on the issue in November's election.

Paulini's address introduced the moratorium petition to the aldermanic Land Use Committee's public hearing, the first legislative step any new petition must undergo once docketed.

Last year, Paulini introduced a similar measure that was defeated. The new petition offers exemptions for single-family and subsidized multi-family construction starts. In addition, it would allow for internal and external renovations of existing structures.

EAST BOSTON — Snowflakes fall from a steel-gray sky, driven by a cold wind blowing in from the harbor. Every few minutes, the loud roar of jets interrupts the monotonous sound of cars and trucks splashing past the gas tanks along Route 1A.

The weather, miserable as it may be, does not deter the hard-core fan of the "Sport of Kings." More oblivious to the elements than even the postman, they brave the chill to play ponies and chase dreams at a window marked "Bet and Cash."

The players bet on horses and the jockeys who ride them. They also look at bloodlines. Many "systems" hinge not only on the horse, but the horse's heritage. If Sea Biscuit's father and grandfather were winners, it follows in this system that Sea Biscuit can be a winner too.

Bloodlines can also be a factor for the jockey, especially if you are betting on a horse ridden by Abigail Fuller.

Fuller, a 26-year-old heiress from the "right" side of the tracks in Chestnut Hill, grew up in an atmosphere that seems light years from this tired old dustbin known as Suffolk Downs. Daughter of auto magnate and fillyphile Peter Fuller and granddaughter of former

Fraud hinted in air rights presentation

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Glenn Morris had no authority to present his report on air-rights development to the recent Ward 2 Democratic Committee meeting, according to Alderman Richard McGrath and some members of the Urban Design and Beautification Commission (UDBC) Morris chairs.

McGrath, who along with Morris and attorney Peter Harrington were panelists for the Ward 2 meeting, is asking Morris to step down from his position for what he says is "a probably fraudulent misrepresentation" by the UDBC chairman.

"My argument is not as much what Mr. Morris is saying," McGrath says. "I recognize that there are people who support his position of developing air rights. The reason I am concerned is the use of his position as chairman (of the UDBC). I don't even know if they've seen (the draft report Morris presented) but Mr. Morris has stepped into an area that is probably fraudulent, with knowledge, forethought and deliberateness.

"He misleads people as to the source of the comments," McGrath adds. "He is the author. If I were a member of that committee, I would demand he apologize to the people, retract the statements he made on behalf of the committee and look for another chairman. I would also see if the mayor and others condone Morris' actions."

Morris says he will not step down.

"Alderman McGrath can ask for whatever he likes," Morris says. "I see no reason to resign."

McGrath produced a copy of a UDBC memorandum dated Dec. 4, 1985, which says Morris' guidelines for the limitation of the controversial development strategy "were his views only."

"If you look at the context and date of the letter and recognize that on Jan. 16 he continued to allow audiences to perceive he was speaking on behalf of that commission is a knowledgeable

Morality in politics debated

Frank vs. the Moral Majority

By Maureen Azzato
Correspondent

NEWTON — Rev. Harold Crowell, founder and chairman of the Massachusetts Moral Majority, does not believe in the separation of church and state or in freedom of religious choice, according to U.S. Rep. Barney Frank.

According to Crowell, the Constitution is inspired by the Bible, and Christianity is the moral foundation of the republic established by America's founding fathers.

"We are a Christian nation that has chosen God, and the Constitution, as dictated by our founding fathers, is based on Christian morality," Crowell said. "Our government should maintain the wishes, morality and religion of our founding fathers."

'Some may look at this as brain-washing, but when my brain was washed it came clean.'

Rev. Harold Crowell

Frank and Crowell argued the issue of morality and religion in politics in a heated debate last week at the War Memorial Auditorium. Liz Walker, co-anchor of WBZ-TV news, moderated the debate, which was sponsored by the Newton Human Rights Commission.

"The question put to us tonight is, 'Who sets the moral standards of our government?'" Walker said. "Don't politicians often use morality issues to appeal to their constituents, and is it fair? This debate is not so much in the spirit of confrontation, but in the diversity of thought in a democracy."

Crowell said moral values are based on a person's religion, and government officials make

The joys of finding a friend

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

Julie and Carol have been friends since mid-September. From the start, however, the relationship has been limited because Carol is a mentally retarded adult.

Carol had the ability to speak "just one word at a time," recalls Julie. And that word was "Yes."

Now, following four months of weekly visits involving excursions to the grocery store, to church, and to the hairdresser, plus some work on improving Carol's speech, Carol can say three words at a time.

"She knows the sign of the cross, and 'Thanks Be To God,'" says Julie, and she sings along with songs on the radio. "Elvis songs are her favorite."

Julie Hurst, 25, chose to befriend Carol after learning of a new program aimed at integrating mentally retarded adults into the Newton community.

Sponsored by the Newton-Wellesley-Weston Committee to Establish Community Residences for the Retarded, Inc., the program — called Community Access — trains and matches up each volunteer with one of the organization's 29 clients living in Newton's homes for the retarded or with elderly parents.

The program began in the fall with a grant from the City of Newton Community Development Program using HUD Community Development funds.

Although Hurst, who has experienced working with retarded adults while in college, offers Carol an added dimension in their relationship through helping her speak, the goal of the Community Access Program is less ambitious.

Graphic wins NEPA awards

The Newton Graphic walked away from last weekend's New England Press Association annual award dinner with three awards and a scholarship.

News Editor Kevin C. Kennedy won a "special award" from the association for a column he wrote on drunken driving, while Staff Writer Edward Cafasso was cited for a column he wrote lamenting the new, materialistic turn he saw his own generation taking.

Staff Writer Howard Altman won an award for a sports column he wrote during the short-lived baseball strike, in which he carried on an imaginary conversation with his deceased uncle, legendary Boston Braves slugger Sid Gordon, who commented, "I know countries that make less than these guys."

John A. Moroney, an intern from Northeastern University who has been working part-time with the Graphic for the past two years, won a $1,000 scholarship from the association.

Arcade denial spells trouble in Nonantum

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The story behind last week's denial by the Licensing Commission of a permit for a Nonantum video arcade reads like the script from the Broadway musical "The Music Man."

There is trouble, according to a group of Nonantum teen-agers, in the Garden City. Like the kids in the musical who wanted a pool hall, they say the arcade will keep them off the streets.

"There's nothing to do at night," 16-year-old Lisa Allaine of 84 West St. said before the hearing. "We have nowhere to go."

Allaine and 15 of her friends went to City Hall to show their support for Henry Munevar, owner of a video arcade and pool room at 392 Watertown St. Munevar appeared before the commission seeking a permit to operate five electronic video games. The commission denied the permit on the grounds that the arcade's location is not zoned for recreational purposes.

Munevar operated the Newton Corner Bowl until the owners of the 29 Bacon St. building decided to tear it down, according to Munevar. The teen-agers argued that the bowling alley was the only place in town to "hang out at night."

'What do they want us to do — sit home, drink milk and eat cookies and read a book?'

Paul Camilli, 18

"They won't let us hang out in the Dunkin' Donuts," 17-year-old Roseanne Muhlahan of 20 Emerald St. said. "The cops always kick us out of the park. We can't hang out on the street. The only place for us to go is Henry's arcade. Now they want to shut that down."

Muhlahan said the arcade is the only place where area teen-

A deb in the winner's circle

Massachusetts Governor Alvin T. Fuller, Abigail has the bloodlines of a winner.

Statistics bear that out, proving on the racetrack at least that this system has its merits. During the 1985 season, the Beaver Country Day School graduate finished among the top 10 Suffolk jocks in terms of bringing horses home in the money. Her mounts paid off a respectible 40 percent of the time.

Looks, however, can be deceiving. Sitting in the cramped women's jockey room deep in the bowels of the steel and glass grandstand, 100-pound Abigail Fuller does not look like much of a match for a 2,000-pound horse.

If not for the pungent smell of horse and hay, and the loud blare of the horns announcing post time, it would seem that she is getting ready for a tea party, not a horse race. One would be hard-pressed, on first impression, to imagine this woman with the pert smile and bouncy voice making a living on top of a four-legged animal kicking up mud and manure as it charges around the track.

The real story, though, is that Fuller says she feels more comfortable now on the race circuit than the cocktail circuit. While most girls have an adolescent crush on horses, Fuller grew up among them at her father's Runneymeade Farms in Northampton, New Hampshire.

"My sisters and brother and I all took riding lessons when we were young," she says, "and I rode in horse shows from when I was about eight years old."

Fuller says her initial interest in becoming a jock was piqued during the 1968 Kentucky Derby. Her father entered a horse named Dancer's Image, and Abbey was exposed to big time racing for the first time. It was also a time when women were breaking the sex barrier in horseracing. For the first time, a nine-year-old girl like Abbey Fuller could entertain fancies of a future as a jock without being ridiculed.

"I thought about doing it then," she says, "and women were just about starting at that time. The first ones were breaking in and I began cutting out articles and my dad brought me articles and brought home autographs."

At first, Fuller's interest was just a passing fancy. Growing up in a whirlwind of debutante balls and the general social life of the rich and famous, she temporarily shelved thoughts of thoroughbred horseracing.

"I just kind of forgot about it and was going to school and going to horse shows," she says. "But my dad always encouraged me. When I was about 19 or 20, I had gone as far as I wanted to go with horse jumping. My dad said if you're going to try horseracing, then this is the time now. You don't want to wait too much longer, because you don't want to just walk in and start."

She didn't. Despite, or perhaps because of, Peter Fuller's connections with the "horsey set," Abbey learned the art of guiding a horse around a track like every other jock.

"It definitely was harder being Peter Fuller's daughter," she says. "A lot of people thought, 'What's she doing here?'. They were not looking to give me a big break while some kid who looks hungry and maybe you feel a little bit bad for you can give a shot to. My dad didn't just ride me on his horses and it worked out the best for me. I made it on my own. I know that, and he knows that."

Fuller and her father may have known it, but others in horse racing were skeptical about the young apprentice's ability.

"I worked on the track for three years before I ever rode in a race anyway," she says. "I didn't just come on the track and ride. I worked and galloped and breezed horses out of the gate. My dad wasn't about to throw me on all his horses. That isn't his way. He figures, 'You want to do something, you work to do it.' If you can make it, you make it on your own merit, not on 'Gee, well daddy put her on all his horses.' That's not the way he does things. It worked out well."

Beginning in 1981, Fuller began her apprenticeship in earnest. Shuttling back and forth between Massachussetts and Field Acres in Ocala, Florida, Abbey Fuller learned how to ride.

By November, 1982, she was ready. The railbirds at Suffolk, however, had their doubts.

"People always have something to say at the rail," she says, "like, 'Why don't you go home and wash the dishes?' I just had to laugh that off as a joke, especially when they bet against me and lost money when I won." It was eight months before Abbey Fuller got to laugh though. It wasn't until June, 1985, that she won her first race.

"There were a few times when I wanted to forget about the whole thing. It took a long time to get any respect. But I stuck with it, because I love riding. I am a jockey and this is my career."

Last summer, Fuller's perseverance paied off for both herself and her father. Riding a filly named Mom's Command, raised at her father's farm, Abbey Fuller captured the New York Racing Association Filly's Triple Crown. Aside from the fact that it was a Fuller horse with a Fuller riding it, the crown was especially gratifying for the Fuller family. Dancer's Image was disqualified from the 1968 Kentuckey Derby after a lengthy legal battle over whether or not the horse was doped.

"It was great vindication for my dad," Fuller says of the crown. "He was obviously thrilled. We were all in a little bit of shock, but afterwards we realized that it really happened. Now that it is over, I realize that it was a lot of fun."

Riding a horse like Mom's Command, Fuller says, is a rare treat.

"It was incredible to build up a relationship with the horse," she says. "I really never had ridden one like that. The races showed her class and ability. (Trainer) Ned (Allard) did a great job because of the distances. You have to peak (the horse) for the race and they have to come down and be ready again in two weeks. It was especially tough because the race distances ran from between a mile and a mile-and-a-half. Not too many fillies are asked to do that, but Mom didn't struggle. She blew the other horses away."

Fuller says the relationship between horse and rider in a series like the triple crown is "pshycological."

"You know you're riding them," she says, "and everytime they ran, the horse knew who was riding it. She could feel how much confidence I had in her. I'm not saying someone else couldn't ride Mom. She was great. I imagine anyone who rides her would feel the confidence the horse has."

That victory though, was in 1985. Fuller says the horse business is "What have you done for me lately?"

"There is no security for a jockey," she says. "My dad always said to me it is what you do for me today, not what you did yesterday. Winning with Moms was great, but they always ask if you have you won a race lately. That is part of the thrill. You're never quite sure what is going to happen. I got to ride in my first stakes race because the jockey who was supposed to ride Dawn Assignment was coming from New York and was fogged in at the airport."

For Abbey Fuller, it is back to the grind on this snowy day. As with all riders, she is locked in the jockey room for security reasons. Waiting to ride a four-year-old bay gelding named "Rockyroadtodublin" in the fourth race, Fuller looks around the locker room and reflects on how much her life has changed since her days as a debutante.

"We have to get up early seven days a week," she says. "You go to sleep at 9 p.m. and get up at 5:30 a.m. In between, people are yelling at you after the race. The pressure and tension wears on you. It is not the life of a social butterfly, but I don't mind. I did that bit with the horse shows, sometimes staying up all night, but I was ready for the change.

"People think the track is some kind of degenerate place," she adds. "In some ways, with all the gambling, it is. But I am protective of this place and this sport. This is my job and the track is my home."

Shared vision marks Christian Unity week

By Kevin C. Kennedy, News Editor

Between the memorials for Martin Luther King and the marathon hype for the Super Bowl, it was easy to miss the fact that last week was Christian Unity Week. That is unless you happened to hear of the celebration of Christian unity planned by Fr. Anthony Moore at St. Bernard's Church in West Newton.

In a ceremony entitled "Let Us Build the City of God," Fr. Moore joined with clergy from four other local churches to celebrate their common heritage. Joining Fr. Moore in the program were Rev. Howard Haywood of Myrtle Baptist Church, Rev. Ned Martin of the Second Church, Rev. Martha Kline of the Eliot Church and Rev. William Lowe of the Church of the Messiah.

Fr. Gerard Barry, pastor of St. Bernard's, began the program with an appeal to those crowded into the church to "reflect on our singleness as God's children."

The assembled choirs of the Myrtle Baptist Church entered the darkened church in procession, each member carrying a candle and singing "Holy, holy, holy," one of many hymns with which all the Christians gathered were familiar.

Later in the program, Fr. Moore thanked the choir for "a sumptuous musical feast."

Rev. Haywood addressed the gathering first, thanking the Lord for the gathering and asking that it be blessed "in the name of your sweet son, Jesus."

Revs. Martin and Kline read from the scriptures, while Rev. Lowe interceded on the part of Christian unity.

Fr. Moore quoted from the Gospel according to St. John, Jesus speaking to His Father of Christians: "May they be so completely one, the world will know it was you who sent me."

He also spoke of a time, earlier in the century, "when Christian unity was highly unfashionable" and the differences between Christian churches were emphasized.

He urged those gathered to act as those Christians did hundreds of years ago, when they devoted all their energies to the construction of a cathedral they knew would not be completed in their lifetime. He asked for help in building "a huge, unseen Christian cathedral .... Each one of us can contribute a tiny brick to this immense edifice."

Fr. Moore added that any effort to unify Christians will require tolerance, faith and the suppression of parochialism. "It is unity we seek, not uniformity," he told the crowd.

Leaning on his own extensive mountainclimbing experience, Fr. Moore cautioned that it might be "a long pilgrimage toward Christian unity," and he reminded those gathered that the main obstacles would be "man-made abysses."

The goal of all Christians, according to Fr. Moore, should be to realize the vision of "one fold and one shepherd."

A reception in the Parish Hall following the evening service was well attended. Tables groaned with delectable sweets from the five parishes. There was a huge cake with the words "Chirstian Unity" written on the top. Everyone had a piece and agreed it was delicious.

Mother indicted in infant's death

NEWTON — A 23-year-old Upper Falls woman who allegedly allowed her infant to die in in the ladies' bathroom of a bank on Needham Street was indicted by a grand jury Wednesday.

Margaret A. Moreau will be arraigned in Middlesex Superior Court Friday on charges of manslaughter.

Moreau is accused of giving birth to an infant on Nov. 20 in the employees bathroom of the Northeast Savings Bank and leaving the baby to die in a wastepaper basket while she returned to her duties at the bank.

District Attorney Jay Carney said the pre-trial conference and the trial date will be scheduled on Friday. Moreau's charge carries a maximum sentence of 20 years imprisonment, Carney said. According to Carney, the state will pursue the case strongly.

"I certainly feel the state has a case, and I think the Grand Jury indictment speaks for itself," Carney said.

Moreau's lawyer, Jeffery Moxom was unavailable for comment.

Carney said Moreau was ordered to Medfield State Hospital for psychiatric observation by Judge Richard A. Bohn Jr. Nov. 22.

"A report was filed Dec. 12 which stated the defendant is competent to stand trial," Carney said.

According to Carney, the defendant became pregnant early last year and tried to get an abortion, but doctors at the clinic denied the defendant an abortion because the fetus was too developed.

On the morning of Nov. 20, Moreau broke water at approximately 6 a.m. Moreau went to work and at 2:40 p.m. went into the employee bathroom where she gave birth over a 27 minute period, District Attorney spokesman Thomas Somoluck said.

Moreau then placed the baby in the wastepaper basket, covering the infant with blood stained towels she used to clean up the restroom.

Two janitors found the baby at 8:45 p.m. Moreau was arrested the following morning and charged with manslaughter.

Library fund drive moves forward

NEWTON — The fundraising drive for a new library has taken a step forward with a citizens' group's agreement to find potential donors.

Friends of the Newton Free Library has agreed to work with Ketchum Inc. to raise $1 million to $1.5 million in donations for a new library, said Nancy Criscitiello, president of Friends.

The group plans to sign a contract soon with Ketchum, a fundraising consulting company, and begin the drive, Criscitiello said.

"It's a formidable responsibility, but we're ready for it," said Criscitiello.

In December, the library project ran into a technical glitch when members of Friends said they could not participate without approval by their board of directors.

With Friends' recent decision to participate, the first phase of the fund drive — identifying potential donors — can begin. A steering committee of eight Friends and two library trustees is to take charge of that task.

Dorothy Reichard, chairman of the Library Board of Trustees, said she has appointed trustees Patricia Burdick and Joseph Biotti to the committee.

The group's first task is to identify large donors, such as family foundations, trusts and companies, said Reichard. "The big donors you try to get to immediately," she said.

Ketchum will interview the potential large donors, then project how much money the drive is likely to net.

"It would be nice to have that by early spring," Criscitiello said. "Then you can put and organization together and plan events."

Actual pledges and contributions from large donors probably will be sought over the summer, she said. When that phase is complete, the drive will attempt to raise funds from Newton residents.

Permit parking proposal fine tuned

NEWTON — The aldermanic Public Safety and Transportation Committee fine tuned the proposed resident permit parking legislation Monday night, a move some hope to increase the petition's chances of passing the full board.

The committee unanimously adopted guidelines for Police Chief William Quinn to consider when lifting or imposing parking restrictions. In addition, the committee unanimously approved half of Mayor Theodore Mann's proposed revisions to the ordinance.

At a previous PS&T meeting on Jan. 13, Quinn told the committee about ambiguities concerning his ability to waive parking restrictions for events like the Mayor's Prayer Breakfast and Boston College graduation ceremonies.

The committee Monday night decided to ask the chief to consider "whether said prohibition or allowance of temporary parking has repeatedly impacted a particular neighborhood, village or area of the City of Newton" when considering waiving or imposing restrictions.

Assistant City Solicitor Christopher Tawa said the amendment would help the petition clear some hurdles at the Feb. 3 Board of Aldermen meeting.

"It is crucial that the committee adopted this amendment," he said. "The whole question of giving the chief these powers provides a safety valve, and this sets up some guidelines for him to follow."

At the Jan. 13 meeting, the committee concurred with Quinn's argument that he should have authority to make those decisions in emergency situations. The chief also would make those decisions for lawful assemblies, demonstrations and processions.

Quinn said he had not abused his power to make those decisions in the past and that he would go before the board if there were any problems with future decisions.

The committee Monday night also unanimously rejected amendments requested by the mayor asking that permit parking petitions be filed within the first 30 days of the calendar year and that the petitioners pay a $150 filing fee.

The committee approved a mayoral recommendation that the stickers be affixed to the rear side window on the passenger side and a provision to lift restrictions on legal or religious holidays or during municipal or Newton public school functions.

The complete petition, which calls for permit parking to be instituted in various areas of the city that have parking problems, is slated to go before the Legislation and Rules Committee Tuesday night for codification.

The petition asks the board to consider requests from the public to restrict parking on some city streets to cars owned by those who live there and their guests.

Ald. Richmond cited upon retirement

NEWTON — They never really appreciate you until you're gone.

The truth of the old saw was demonstrated Monday night as former Alderman Edward L. Richmond was awarded a miniature telephone pole with a hip guy anchor at Monday night's Public Facilities Committee meeting.

During his 14 years as an alderman, Richmond constantly opposed requests by Boston Edison and New England Telephone and Telegraph to install the device on city utility poles.

The hip guy anchor consists of a cable and a metal arm which projects from the pole. The arm reduces the angle at which the cable runs so it can be anchored on the sidewalk below rather than on a resident's property.

Richmond, an alderman from 1972 to 1985, considered the hip guy anchor a safety hazard because residents could unwittingly stumble over the cable while strolling.

"We loved him dearly, but he was a pain in the neck on the Public Facilities Committee," said City Clerk Edward English, who presented Richmond with commemorative award.

"This is most interesting," said Richmond, looking at the miniature pole with bemusement. "I think I'm going to introduce an ordinance banning the hip guy."

The Public Facilities Committee probably appreciated Richmond's retirement more than ever Monday night. With little discussion, the committee approved two requests by Edison and New England Telephone to install a utility pole with the hip guy anchor.

Centre improvement committee formed

NEWTON CENTRE — As plans move forward to spend about $100,000 for revamping two parking lots in Newton Centre, a committee of residents and merchants are discussing ways to improve that village center's image.

Department of Public Works (DPW) Commissioner James L. Hickey Monday night said a committee has been formed to explore improving the look of the rear of stores in the center.

Newton Centre resident Ethel Sheehan, chairman of the committee, said the back sides of some stores are marred with graffiti.

The committee's work is slated to take place as the city plans to upgrade two parking lots located behind the stores at Pelham and Pleasant streets. Hickey offered what he called a "very rough estimate" of $100,000 to do the entire project.

The aldermanic Public Facilities and Finance committees Monday night approved $20,000 to design improvements for the two lots. The work includes new curbing, drainage, lighting and asphalt, as well as trees to separate the lots from surrounding residences, Hickey said.

Speaking at the Public Facilities meeting, Pelham Street resident Ernest Siciliano said efforts must be made to ensure spaces in the revamped lot are available for residents. Commuters and store employees take up most of the spaces, leaving little for local shoppers, he said.

About 60 percent of the lots' spaces are reserved for all-day parkers, Hickey said. The lots originally were intended to divert all-day parkers from street spaces, he said.

Former employee arrested in rug theft

NEWTON LOWER FALLS — A former employee of Gregorian Oriental Rugs was arrested last week for allegedly stealing four Oriental rugs worth approximately $35,000.

Mark L. Freeman of Natick was pulled over by Natick police for an outstanding warrant. Police said they found the rugs in the back of his van.

Newton Detective Sergeant Arthur T. Fryar said an informer called his department, alleging that Freeman was responsible for the theft. According to Fryar, Gregorian didn't know the rugs were missing.

"We got a search warrant for Freeman's house and van, but when we got to his house he wasn't there," Fryar said. "Wednesday night he was held on other charges in Natick and then we got a warrant for his arrest in district court so he would be transferred here."

Freeman, 23, was arraigned in district court yesterday on a charge of larceny over $100. The defendant, who pleaded not guilty, was released on personal recognizance by Judge Monte G. Basbas. The case was continued to Feb. 6.

Fire damages home, injures firefighter

WEST NEWTON - A two-alarm fire early Monday morning caused extensive damage to a home at 292 Waltham Street.

Nobody was home at the time of the fire. One firefighter, Lt. Thomas Madden, received three stitches in his thumb from an injury sustained while fighting the fire.

The fire was discovered around 3:15 a.m. by a police officer who saw smoke in the area. Firefighters arrived at the two-and-a-half story shingle home and found heavy smoke and flames on the first and second floors. The second alarm was sounded six minutes after the first.

Fire department officials said they were not sure exactly how the fire started, but that they were "leaning toward faulty wiring" as the cause. They said the home was owned by Jon Birdsey.

The fire apparently started on the first floor then spread up through the second floor into the attic. The blaze was "very hot and smoky. It took us an hour to get it under control," said fire officials.

Assistant Chief Karl W. Meinhart Jr. was in charge of operations at the fire, and Assistant Chief William Dwyer was called to the scene when the second alarm was sounded.

Nonantum residents fight for status quo

By Les Orsini, Staff Writer

NONANTUM — What some Nonantum residents fear for their neighborhood is represented by a six-story Crafts Street office building that towers over neighboring homes.

They fought developer Michael Iodice's building — now a steel skeleton draped with clear plastic — and while they did not halt construction, residents recently won a zoning change to limit the surrounding area to single and two-family homes.

Last week, some Nonantum residents sounded the same theme, telling representatives of the city's Village Study team they do not want their old-style, urban neighborhood to be swamped by development.

A crowd of 30 people, including several Nonantum businessmen, gathered to hear Connery Associates of Winchester tell them their village center has a much greater potential for commercial and office space than for residences.

Connery was hired last summer to conduct the $191,000 Village Study, which aims to create a comprehensive development plan for the city by May 1987. The Nonantum session was the third of 15 meetings designed to gather comment from residents of each of the city's villages.

According to present zoning, Nonantum could gain 1.4 million square feet of office space, more than 170 times the existing amount, according to figures compiled by Connery.

And 217,000 square feet of commercial space could be added to the existing village center, 78 percent more than is already there.

At the same time, just 81 residences could be built in the area, only 11 percent more than the current number.

Of Newton's 15 village centers, only Chestnut Hill has the potential for more commercial and office development than Nonantum, according to Connery.

Connery consultant Robert Catineau cautioned the audience that those figures represent only what can happen, not what necessarily will occur. Residents can act through the Village Study and their elected officials to shape Nonantum's future, he said.

"The goal of this study is to plan for development 25 years from now," said Joshua Katzen, chairman of the Economic Development Commission (EDC), which has worked with Connery on the study.

Most of the development potential exists in adding onto the height of existing buildings, Catineau said. "What you can build is a lot greater than what is there," he said. "In Nonantum, it's rather startling."

"It would take a long time for this to fill up," he said. "but it can happen."

Most residents said they don't want that to happen.

John Rogers of Cook Street said city officials appear to favor development as a way to increase the tax base. "There seems to be an implicit inevitability of commercial growth," he said.

Margaret Cormier said residents want support to prevent development like Iodice's Craft Street office building. "If that happens on Watertown Street, we'll fight it," she said.

Catineau reminded residents Connery is a planning firm, not a development company, and has no bias either for or against commercial and industrial construction.

Bernice Chesler, who lives outside the Nonantum area, told residents not to let the character of their village center change. "As soon as you change a neighborhood, you lose the precious commodity of small stores, neighborhood shops," she said.

Businessmen spoke in favor of controlled development.

Lewis Songer, executive vice president of the Newton-Needham Chamber of Commerce, said the city's policy of taxing businesses at "150 percent" drives out the small shops and stores, paving the way for large development.

A lot of the space Connery says could be developed for commercial use is now residential and "very unlikely to change," he said.

David Maguire, owner of Maguire Plumbing and Heating on Adams Street, agreed. Managing growth and maintaining the character of the village center are most important issues, he said.

Businessmen who would harm the character of a neighborhood are "a small percentage of the whole. And I think the residents have to understand that," he said.

Must explain shuttle tragedy to children

Space shuttle flights: They had become so common they were not even front-page news anymore.

Until Tuesday.

Tuesday's flight was to be different; a teacher was going into space to rivet the attention of school children throughout the nation with lessons taught live from the vacuum of space.

Because it was different, because it had Concord, N.H., school teacher Christa McAuliffe aboard, Tuesday's launch was watched by thousands of bright-eyed school children in classrooms all over the country.

All of them witnessed the sort of massive national and personal tragedy that overwhelms the adult world's capacity to explain.

Had one of the earlier shuttle flights erupted into such a catastrophe, the nation would have mourned the loss of its astronauts and left the lingering questions to its experts.

The men and women in those earlier shuttle flights were little more than names to most Americans. And six of the seven astronauts on Tuesday's shuttle flight were similarly anonymous.

Christa McAuliffe, on the other hand, was a national folk hero before Challenger left the launch pad. The publicity surrounding her 'classroom-in-space' program catapulted her to the status of a beloved celebrity to American students.

She was to bring them the magic, the grandure of space. She was to take them all with her on an odyssey. She would bring space to life for them.

Instead, her brief flight taught them the bitterness of death.

Children have lost a friend, and they must contend with the grief that a friend's loss entails.

Challenger's fiery blast has left a scar on the students' psyche that no mountain of technical data can erase.

Somehow, the nation must explain to its children how it could have let their friend, Christa McAuliff, die.

Sounding a wakeup call for the sleepy GOP

A party that has to advertise for candidates at all levels is in pretty sad shape. So it is with Massachusetts Republicans. Not since John "Vote the Man" Volpe rose above GOP stagnation as a nonpoliticial, civic-minded personality to capture the governorship has anyone emerged to mount a serious challenge to Democratic suprenmacy.

The withdrawal of converted Edward J. King from the 1986 prospect list was meaningless. It could be assumed, as it was here, that the former governor had little chance of drumming up money or organizational support.

Independent classification might have made him an attractive choice for crossover voters, along with old-line Democratic conservatives, but even there his chances of rediscovering the magic touch would have been doubtful. Michael Dukakis preempted much of E. J. King's favored initiatives, notably in his relationship with high tech and the rest of the business community. Libel suit or not as a distraction, King's realism won over desire.

Since the Dukakis position is so strong, with a tax cut he expediently embraced, along with a bountiful budget inherited from the economic boom, all is bright for the Duke.

Some recognizable figures in the Republican fold probably won't be interested in running because the incumbent is so well entrenched. One of the most respected legislative figures, Sen. David H. Locke of Wellesley, probably will resist overtures once again. He has a solid law practice that would be impaired by a will o' the wisp venture.

Locke would be a candidate of stature. Calm and well prepared for reasonable debate, he has the kind of incisive wit that stamps Bob Dole as a man of consequence in the U.S. Senate.

Few astute General Court veterans get to be governor, it seems. Away back, a former Newton mayor, Howard Whitmore, chairman of House Ways and Means, was drafted by the Grand Old Party to make the big move and fell far short. Whitmore proved himself as an exceedingly competent MDC chairman later.

Wellesley offers still another prospective Republican entry in Rep. Royall H. Switzler. A totally different personality from Locke, but also one who does his homework, Switzler is bombastic, flamboyant and longwinded. He could deliver a big bang in the campaign, drawing blood with rapier thrusts.

Maybe Rep. Switzler would wake up the moribund legion of futility that is the statewide minority presence. Too much Democratic power on Beacon Hill can be expensive.

Marking Time

Not one of Ray Flynn's bigger fans

I can't take it anymore. I can't take his quotes, his publicity seeking, his constant TV coverage, and his ridiculous video. Who, pray tell, am I referring to? The Honorable Raymond J. Flynn.

Anybody who has seen that embarrassing video, "The Patriots, New England and We," should be embarrassed to show their face in the rest of the country. And Mayor Flynn's pathetic attempt at "Thanks for the oranges Mayor Bradley" was the straw that broke the camel's back.

First things first. I love the Patriots and have been a fan for many years, but the downside of the football euphoria was the anticipation of Flynn in the winning locker room being interviewed on national TV, or Flynn organizing a rally on City Hall Plaza to celebrate the Patriots championship.

The thought of those possiblities was enough to make even the strongest fan think twice about rooting for the Pats. But this is just the tip of the iceberg.

When the Celtics won the world championship, guess who was standing next to Red Auerbach in the winning locker room beaming as if he had scored the winning points.

When the fire occurred at the Prudential Center, who was standing in front of the building on the 11 o'clock news as if he had just doused the last flame?

When the school bus drivers went on strike, who got all the publicity for holding secret negotiations?

When the Chinese citizen of Boston was allegedly assaulted by a Boston policeman, who brought over a bag of groceries for the victim? Sure, it was a nice gesture, but it would have been just as nice if there was no TV coverage.

The list goes on and on. Whether its pushing through a poorly thought-out condo conversion bill or threatening to take over a meat packing plant because he doesn't agree with, the policy is typical of this guy who will do anything to get publicity and attract large blocks of votes.

I know that he's unbeatable and popular, but candidates who say things to all people usually are unbeatable and popular.

I have a running joke with my wife. Every Saturday and Sunday evening we look for Ray on the 6 o'clock news and he has yet to disappoint us.

So in honor of Ray's career as a video star we now present the "City Hall Shuffle":

My name is Flynn
And I like TV
All politicians
Can learn from me
In the locker rooms
Or any old place
Just turn on the tube
And ya'll see my face
When a team's on a roll
I don't dally
You'll find me in a t-shirt
At a City Hall rally.
If you saw the Pats video,
Which was done so badly,
You saw me screw up
My line about Mayor Bradley
If a tragedy occurs
I can't lose.
I'll console the victims
And end up on the news.
I don't care
Whose feathers I ruffle.
I'm just doing
The City Hall shuffle.

Dogs do it; we fight over it

By Diana Morley

"Clean it up? You're not serious!" I scowled at the fellow across the street standing guard in front of his house and well-kept yard, in Newtonville.

"Oh yes," he said, nodding. "It's a heck of a mess. The children step in it, and if you've ever mowed where a lotta dogs have gone..."

"Oh, I agree. That's why I curb him. I don't let him on the grass until he's relieved himself. I don't like to see it messed up either."

He persisted, saying, "In the gutter, it stinks. You have the pleasure of the dog, I don't. Yet I have to smell it."

I wiped the perspiration off my forehead and grabbed at the gnats swarming in my face. It was July. Humidity made everything more difficult. "October," our Springer Spaniel with jumpy eyebrows, had stopped short with me. But now he sat, yawning, resigned to enduring one of my awful conversations.

I had just spent half an hour circling the streets, trying to get him to go in the gutter. But before we moved here (where we have no yard), he'd had ten years in the country, where he went in the woods, on leaves, or on wild vegetation. He was frustrated by concrete curbs and therefore, uncooperative.

The homeowner and I talked awhile, each shifting from foot to foot. He explained that for years he'd been frustrated trying to grow flowers in his yard. He also told me about the grassy area next to the Newtonville library — because of the dogs, they fenced it in. Now no one can enjoy it.

I sympathized. When dogs run loose or are undisciplined, it's hard on everyone else at times. Our neighbors' dogs dropped their loads right where we played volleyball, and I resented having to get the wheelbarrel and cleaning it up. I explained that I walked our dog on the green when he moved here, because that's where everyone else walked their dogs. But when signs were posted requesting that dogs be kept off, I complied.

I could understand: it's hard to sunbathe or to play with children on the grass when it's an obstacle course. But I was surprised to learn this morning that even using the gutter offends some.

The man and I parted without having resolved the problem, but having aired our views. I think we even listened to one another.

Another time, a woman startled my dog and me when she came running down the driveway, flailing her arms about and pleading with me not to let him go on the tree next to the street in front of her house. "Take him over there," she said, pointing toward the field near Newton North High School. Why there? That's the way it is, though; everyone wants me to go somewhere else.

So I have adopted a random approach rather like that of playing roulette. I walk the dog in as many different routes as possible. Round and round we go, where he'll stop, nobody knows. I don't like to see the same people win every time.

During one outing, a woman broke into smiles as we neared, and she crooned praises to "October." First his eyebrows went wild with worry at his being the center of attention, then he went belly up right in the gutter. Looking up at me, the woman said, "You know, it's so thoughtful of you to walk him in the street. I get tired of watching out for stuff on the sidewalk when we're walking. I was just telling my father, 'Now there's a person with class!'"

I melted. Yes, I thought to myself, since everything can't be to our liking at all times, why not appreciate small blessings?

Before we noticed the newly posted dog signs on the green, our daughter was embarrassed when someone yelled at her and pointed to them, yet many owners continue to take their dogs to the local green, apparently without repercussion.

I made a few phone calls and learned that the Forestry Department had posted them in response to pressure from residents. I said I do not understand why after posting signs the regulation is not enforced. Are some residents more equal than others? They said enforcement was out of their jurisdiction.

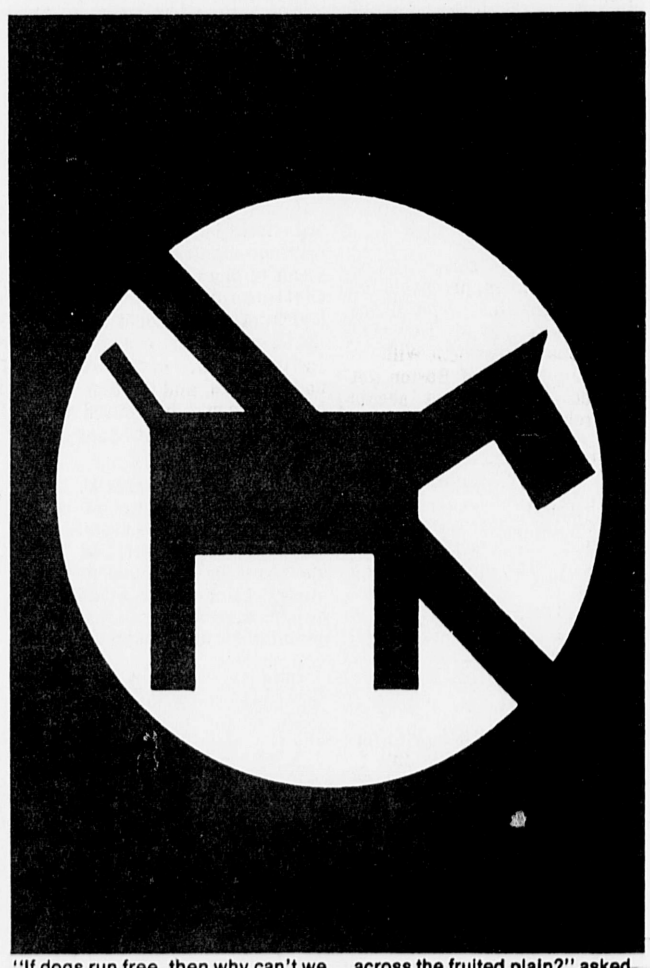
I suppose that as some residents' annoyance grew, a few called in the outside authority for support. Then, after enough complaints, the Forestry Department arrived on the scene, put up signs, and bowed out. There, thought the residents, that takes care of that. But it didn't. Some dog owners may have merely sneered to see that the residents had called in the heavies. Power plays are usually met with the same in return, and a cyclical pattern is formed.

Now each side has come to see the other as wrong: the dog-owning Slimes don't believe in respect for private property (except there own), take pleasure in trashing public property (because they're on a power trip), treat dogs better than most would treat their children, are unable to comprehend simple logic, are under the idiotic impression that canine waste products are among the valued ingredients in garden fertilizer and think their needs are the only important ones.

The resident Rockheads, on the other hand, place private property above such values as love and sensitivity, think they own public property (because they're on a power trip), are hung up on the "superiority" of homo sapiens, are unable to comprehend simple logic, seem to think canine waste products are as toxic as refined uranium, and think their needs are the only important ones.

Newton has just passed a pooper-scooper ordinance, even while acknowledging that enforcement is impossible. More of the same: power from the top, little or no follow-through. A win-lose strategy instead of a win-win strategy that respects the needs of both sides. I'd like to act responsibly, but not by myself. When wearing thick winter mittens, I can barely manage a good grip on the leash. A mismanaged scooper could well become a scatterer. Besides, in the street I have to watch out for fast cars, broken glass, and even a few steaming piles.

This issue involves two valid points of view, and we all pay the same tax rate to maintain public grounds. So both sides must deal with the problem if a true resolution is to be worke dout. Communcation is unavoidable.



"If dogs run free, then why can't we ... across the fruited plain?" asked songwriter Bob Dylan. The answer, in the Garden City, is because we have a "pooper-scooper" ordinance and a growing disenchantment among the natives.

A neighborhood meeting would be the first step in a constructive process. At the start, there would be a lot of hostile ventilation–no way around it. The crucial point would be to get to creative negotiation before walking out.

If I could have my way, everyone would wear tags at this meeting, to identify dog and non-dog owners. Just as the meeting begins, the moderator would ask that everyone switch tags with those in the opposite position, and each would be asked to argue that other side.

This isn't likely to happen, of course. Many of us would rather fight than develop new responses to conflict. It's easier, and after all, we've spent years perfecting battle skills: clever comebacks, imaginative name-calling, well-aimed clips, devastating glares, and provocative silences, etc.

Negotiating would mean letting some of these skills atrophy from lack of use. We seem unable to imagine the longer- lasting rewards that would come from constructive negotiation. So far.

When out running the other day, I passed someone on the sidewalk who called out after me, "Sidewalks are for people who walk. Streets are for runners!" I turned my head and growled.

Beacon Hill Watch

Time is passing, instead of bills

By George B. Merry

Massachusetts legislators seem hung up on what amounts to year-round sessions, with holiday sittings not infrequent. Right now they are twiddling their thumbs. But it could be just the start of another drawn-out lawmaking year.

Few of the 7,546 bills filed for consideration at this year's legislative session are ready for airing. Many are not yet in print.

The senators and representatives, many of whom had been looking forward to an earlier-than-usual start with the "people's business," have little to show, beyond perhaps tired thumbs, for their efforts in the now more than three-week-old 1986 session.

They might have been off to a faster start if last year's legislative sitting had not stretched all the way to midnight on Dec. 31, leaving little time to prepare for this year's work.

Such lengthy sessions, with their all-too-familiar slow pace, frequent recesses, almost innumerable days off, and inevitable frenzied final hours, are nothing to be proud of.

House Speaker George Keverian has made it clear that one of his goals is a shorter legislative year. But a legal limit of six or seven months, as some have proposed, would not work, he says.

Meanwhile, a senate panel, chaired by Sen. Richard Kraus (D) of Arlington, has been weighing possible changes in legislative procedures. Its recommendation: a revamped lawmaking year, in which action on pending bills would have to be completed by the end of July. Such deadlines, however, would stem from joint legislative rules, which could easily be stretched, suspended, or amended to suit the occasion.

Despite some support among fellow senators and representatives, prospects for adoption of this proposal are slim, unless both Mr. Keverian and Senate President William M. Bulger (D) of Boston get behind it. And that seems unlikely.

But this is an election year, and many legislators in both chambers may be eager to get on with campaigning, instead of sticking around Beacon Hill. Thus for 1986, with or without a formal deadline, adjournment by midsummer certainly is possible. Much could hinge on how long it takes to complete work on the fiscal 1987 state budget.

That spending blueprint for the 12 months starting July 1, seems almost sure to include increased funds for the legislature. Certainly worthy of some consideration perhaps might be a modest appropriation to help senators asnd representatives observe holidays, when, for whatever reason, they or their leaders find it necessary for them to work, instead of being with their families.

A few American flags on the desks of each lawmaker and a bit of red, white, and blue bunting on the Senate and House walls might be appropriate for a July 4 sitting. This could be a silent but very visible reminder of the nation's birthday and the precious freedoms, including freedom of speech, protected by the Federal Constitution. No need for fireworks since legislators often make so much noise that the sound of exploding cannon crackers and cherry bombs probably would be drowned out.

Should the lawmakers be in session on Halloween, a time when past legislative exploits have included voting themselves tidy pay raises, a "trick or treat" atmosphere might be achieved with some masks and broomsticks.

And if the senators and representatives are still at it by New Year's eve, all political pork barrels could be rolled out of sight and streamers, funny hats, and noisemakers brought in to help get lawmakers in a more festive mood. There could be separate parties — a Democratic and a Republican party — in both the Senate and the House, with lots of resolutions made at the stroke of midnight.

To spare the humble taxpayer having to spend a nickle on such special occasions, Statehouse lobbyists might get together with their wallets. Instead of buying tickets to the testimonials of various legislators, they could donate the flags, broomsticks, masks, funny hats, streamers, noisemakers, and the like. All of them could be reused by lawmakers year after year on similar occasions,

Even if the legislators wound up their annual sitting by Aug. 1 or shortly thereafter, they could still be recalled by the governor, or themselves, later in the year should there be some important matter demanding early attention.

The agendas at special sessions could be limited to a few items. That would enable the senators and representatives to focus on why they were brought back rather than scattering their legislative attention in many directions.

Zoning violations on the rise

The signs at the entrances to the city proclaim Newton to be the "Garden City."

The area in which I live would be better named the "Boarding House City."

As a lifelong resident of Harvard Street, I have seen this area deteriorate badly.

The old single and two family houses are now for the most part boarding houses.

As many as 9 unrelated persons live in these houses with no private toilet facilities.

State fire codes for apartments are largely ignored. Such codes require that apartment buildings have two means of escape for every unit. In some cases there is only one exit through a common room.

These boarding houses are owned by absentee landlords who are unconcerned about maintenance of their property.

At one time in this neighborhood the unkempt property stood out like a sore thumb. Today, sadly the reverse is true.

Is it too much to ask that, with the reorganization of the building department, commissioner Cameron might be more attentive to his duties?

He's upset with trash pickup

This is an appeal to the citizens of Newton to help "fight City Hall" if they are so inclined.

The problem is the trash pickup. My barrels have been constantly dragged across the street to the truck, and then thrown back in the general direction of my house. Sometimes they land near my curb, and sometimes they're up the street. Needless to say, I've replaced several covers and my barrels are now in terrible condition.

They block the street with their truck, and won't allow cars to pass, comparing the truck to a school bus. I tried to discuss this, politely, with the collectors — also the barrel situation — and was screamed at with obscenities and threatened. These experiences have really shaken me.

Over the past several months I have spoken to Mr. Piselli and Mr. Hickey at Public Works, Mr. Zigo in the Mayor's office, and even the mayor himself. They all assured me the situation would be alleviated.

The trash contract requires the company to return the barrels to the sidewalk. Mr. Zigo went out one day with Mr. Piselli (who I beleive is Mr. Hickey's assistant) and they admitted that they saw several violations. But nothing has ever been done.

Most recently, I have been speaking to Mr. Andrews at the GSX Corporation, the company that has the trash contract. He insisted that he was the person to handle this and would take steps immediately. I had at least six conversations with him, none of which were any more fruitful than my conversations with city employees. All I got were lots of promises.

As taxpayers, we are all being short-changed. I never had any of these problems when the city was handling the job.

As I near my house on my way home from work on pickup day, I see barrels all over the streets — sometimes it's like running an obstacle course to avoid hitting them.

So I appeal to any of you who are having similar problems and agree with me to please call the mayor's office and ask him to take some action.

Let's prove that you can fight City Hall.

Thanks $250 million, Sam

To the editor:

This is a simple public "thank you" from the Newton taxpayers Association to one of our Newton members, Sam Robbins, who singlehandedly managed the effort necessary to obtain almost 7,000 signatures for the CLT state tax/limit surtax repeal.

The success of this petition will save Newton and Massachusetts taxpayers $250 million and limit the growth of taxes to the wage growth in the state if passed by the voters next November on the ballot.

While Newton is usually characterized as the headquarters of liberal Democrat big spending and taxation, our small but determined Newton Taxpayers Association is pleased and thankful for the successful efforts of Sam Robbins who so unselfishly worked to let the working taxpayers of Massachusetts finally get some control back over runaway taxing and spending here in "Taxachusetts," a name we might even lose after next November.

Thanks $250 million, Sam.

Prison sentences for racists

To the editor:

Recently, the Globe published an editorial entitled "Sending Bigots to School," which described Project Aware, a new alternative sentencing program that will, according to the editorial, "allow judges to sentence first offenders convicted of racial offenses to a course in racial sensitivity as an alternative to jail." Unfortunately, it has been the experience of the attorneys in the Civil Rights Division in my office that nearly all those who are brought before the court for civil rights violations, though they technically may be "first offenders," have a long history of entrenched bigotry.

A case brought by the Attorney General's Office in 1982 is a good example. Eight young men were enjoined from violating the civil rights of several black families in the Ross Field section of Hyde Park. After issuing the injunction, Justice James Lynch of the Superior Court admonished the defendants not to violate the order or they "would see what it was like in Deer Island." Three days later, one of the defendants violated the injunction, was cited for criminal contempt of court and, after a trial, was convicted and sentenced to serve 60 days in the House of Correction. As he was escorted out of the courtroom to begin serving the sentence, the defendant called a black court officer "nigger."

This anecdote points out how deep-rooted the racial, ethnic, and religious prejudice in our society can be. While we cannot expect in most cases to change such prejudices through court intervention, we can, through a policy of vigorous and effective prosecution and tough sentences, change behavior. My Civil Rights Division has adhered to this policy, and has seen successes in Lowell, Malden, and Cambridge.

Allowing persons convicted of racist crimes to reenter their community without serving time in jail will be perceived as a mere wrist slap by both their supporters and their victims. The political and legal establishment must deliver a strong message to civil rights violators that their actions will not be tolerated.

Programs such as Project Aware should be encouraged and I applaud the efforts of MCAD Commissioner Rodriguez and others who brought Project Aware into existence. However, I believe that a defendant's participation in the program should not be an alternative to incarceration. Rather, attendance should be a condition of release on parole or post-incarcerative probation. This message will be delivered only by imposing severe sanctions in each and every civil rights case and we should not and will not be satisfied until persons of all races, ethnic backgrounds, and religious beliefs are able to live in peace where they choose.

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY
OF NICKEL AND RASHES
Have you ever noticed a rash under your watchband or rings? If so, you may be allergic to nickel. This common metal is found in most costume jewelry, watchbands, earrings and even some gold jewelry. Nickel is added to metals for brightness and is often added to gold to increase its durability. More than 20 percent of the population is nickel-sensitive. If one is, one will experience redness, itching, and soreness that could lead to infection. Perspiration aggravates any nickel sensitivity that may exist. The salts contained in perspiration react with nickel and cause an allergic reaction. Talc or baby powder applied to skin that comes in contact with nickel may help reduce the sensitivity. The real solution is to select nickel-free precious metals.
For quality gold jewelry, look no further than CAROL "THE GOLD LADY." We carry all types of gold pieces including gold chains. If you have any allergic reaction to jewelry, let us know and we'll select the proper pieces for you. We also do expert jewelry and watch repair. And if you're in the market for a watch you can select from many famous names. You'll find jewelry of distinction when you shop with us at 109 Dalby St., Newton. 'Mainstreaming' leads to finding a friend

"What we're looking for is not necessarily intensity, but continuity," says Susan Melia, volunteer coordinator for the program. "We want people in the lives of our clients just like we all have."

According to a news release on the program, the "NWW staff has long felt that their clients, most of whom have come from state institutions . . . have been segregated in the community. Learning to develop friendships is an important step in community living that only volunteers can provide."

Nancy Slamin, executive director of the Newton-Wellesley-Weston Committee, explains that "A lot of clients look to other people rather than peers for support." Outside friends can expose retarded citizens to activities they are unable to do alone or with their peers, such as attending movies, learning to shop and enjoy music and sports.

Some clients are capable of, for example, maintaining an apartment and going out to dinner. "Others don't have that ability," says Slamin. "Staff from the homes will do it in groups. But it's nice to have your special friend."

> 'No matter what kind of day she's had, as soon as I see Carol, I just see her eyes light up, and that makes me feel really happy too.'
> Julie Hurst

For the many mentally retarded clients who have no family to speak of, the program serves to connect them with the outside world. "A lot of people have no family involvement," says Slamin. "A good half have no family involvement. They went into a state school because their family could no longer care for them." And either they were left there, or their family members have died.

Families can not be faulted for incarcerating their mentally retarded children in state institutions, says Melia. About 40 years ago, physicians recommended that families place their mentally retarded members in state schools.

"Some families visited and some didn't," says Melia. "We have one client — no one knows how he got there. For another, a sibling visits all the time."

Even if the retarded citizen lives at home or has frequent visits with family members, "Friendships and relationships outside family are important," she says.

Everyone — retarded or not — needs to separate themselves to some degree from family expectations. This is true particularly for the mentally retarded, says Melia, whose parents tend to be overly protective.

However, finding volunteers to befriend mentally retarded adults is not always easy. Some Newton residents have even voiced opposition to converting homes in their neighborhoods into residences for the retarded, calling the future inhabitants "zombies."

According to Slamin, these "people are afraid because they don't know what mental retardation is all about. However, once credibility is established, and they understand what's going to happen in the house, either they become enthusiastic or noncommital."

Melia stresses that, contrary to popular belief, the retarded do not have a mental illness. Instead, they have recall and retention problems which results in slower learning. And they have difficulty abstracting, she explains.

For example, a mentally retarded person would not be able to read an MBTA map to travel by "T" from the Woodland station in Newton to Harvard Square, Melia says.

To help area residents better understand mental retardation, the agency is offering volunteer training workshops, which started Jan. 21 and are running into June. They include an introduction to mental retardation, Individual Service Plans for the mentally retarded, residential activities of daily living, community resources for mentally retarded adults and the role of the volunteer.

Unlike Hurst, not all volunteers have to serve in the role of friend to a retarded adult. Slamin notes that "One volunteer who can't get out does mending." The agency also has an artist who offers his drawing talents for an agency newsletter, and a maintenance worker who performs such tasks as changing light bulbs for clients.

The United Parish Church, Auburndale, houses several of the agency's clients in a carriage house on the property, and helps the retarded Newton citizens by donating firewood, house cleaning and throwing Christmas parties in their honor.

In addition, the church will be converting a parsonage into apartments for six more retarded adults this spring. (See related story.)

Melia adds that volunteers wishing to work on a more intimate basis with a retarded individual are matched up with the agency's clients according to needs and interests.

According to Hurst, Carol "really needed a volunteer."

"She didn't have a family and just came out of an institution," Hurst recalls. "And she really didn't have any friends in her new environment. I thought she was so alone."

Hurst prefers working "one on one" with a retarded adult, she says, because they are "so loving and easygoing. They're always happy."

She continues, "No matter what kind of day she's had, as soon as I see Carol, I just see her eyes light up, and that makes me feel really happy too."

Newton students in debating tourney

NEEDHAM — Several students from St. Sebastian's Country Day School in Needham, including a Newton youth, are slated to attend the fourth annual Loomis-Chaffee Debating Tournament in Windsor, Conn., on Jan. 26.

Accompanied by their club moderator, John Lawless, the following students will attend: Robert Sama, Robert McGurrin and John Ashe from Waltham, Gregory Paul from Needham, Norman Praught and Bill O'Hearn from Newton.

There will be two rounds of competition on the prepared topic, "Resolved: That advertisements promoting beer and wine should be banned from television and radio." The rounds will be followed by a round of debate.

Church provides home for six retarded adults

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

The United Parish Church of Auburndale may be losing a parsonage, but it's gaining a family.

Next spring, six mentally retarded adults will be moving into the parsonage when remodeling of the apartments is completed.

"We're hoping the church community will get involved in helping these people and make them part of the community," said Albert Horton, a member of the congregation involved in completing preparations for the arrival of the mentally retarded Newton citizens.

And judging by the congregation's track record, it seems they will have no problem accomplishing that task. Currently, there are two retarded adults living in the church's carriage house. Prior to their arrival, people from the church allocated money to renovate the kitchen, with one person serving as general contractor, coordinating the rebuilding effort.

When the two retarded citizens moved in over Columbus Day weekend, members of the congregation gave them housewarming presents. And over Christmas, the church treated the two to a tree trimming party and potluck supper. The church has also given firewood to the two women and have cleaned their apartment.

According to Susan Melia, volunteer coordinator at Newton-Wellesley-Weston Committee to Establish Community Residences for the Retarded, the United Parish is "our model customer." "That's what we're looking for — relationship building," says Melia, referring to the agency's Community Access Program, which seeks out volunteers in the community to establish social relationships with the agency's mentally retarded adult clients.

Horton said he expects that, once a grant from the City of Newton is approved, hopefully by Feb. 1, the remodeling of the parsonage will be completed in April, when the residents can move in.

He explains that the church found itself with three extra buildings when two churches — the Auburndale Congregational and the Central United Methodist — merged five years ago.

"We went out looking for agencies," and the parish settled on NWW "because it would serve Newton and they needed the housing," he said.

In addition, there were several families in the church who had retarded children, "so I think it hit home," said Horton.

The church also considered other possibilities for the buildings, including a refuge for battered women, explains Horton.

But "when we saw the other homes (for the retarded), that really did it for us," he said.

During a dinner with residents at Newton's two homes for the mentally retarded — Juniper House in Newton Corner and Orchard Avenue in West Newton — the United Parish group discovered how independent the residents could be. "They did their own cooking when we visited," recalls Horton. "They take turns. . . They're all so nice."

Impressed by the homey atmosphere of the residences, the congregation decided they could offer the same sort of housing on their property.

"It's better than having them in an institution," Horton said. "They need help."

The church will be leasing the building — to be dubbed 89 Grove St. — to Newton-Wellesley-Weston for 10 years.

Arcade permit denied, no place to 'hang out' agers can go where alcohol and drugs are not a problem.

"There's all kinds of drinking in the park," she said. "All the fights that break out are because of the drugs and alcohol. The arcade is supervised and we aren't allowed to drink there. I can't believe they want to shut it down."

The real problem, as 18-year-old Paul Camilli of Clinton St. pointed out, is that the teen-agers do not stay home at night.

"What do they want us to do," he asked. "Sit home, drink milk and eat cookies and read a book? We like to go out. If they close down the arcade, it's back to the park, the streets and the drugs."

Commission Chairman Carleton Merrill explained to Munevar and the teen-agers that the arcade has been operating illegally in the two weeks since Munevar opened shop, because the city zoning codes do not allow for a recreational business without approval from the Board of Aldermen. Munevar, who obtained a license from the City Clerk's office, did not get approval from the building department or check the zoning codes, a fact nobody noticed until commission members toured the site last week.

There was vocal opposition to Munevar's plan. "Why don't you go to a mall," one woman, who would not identify herself, shouted to the teen-agers.

Another woman, who also refused to give her name, complained that "The area is already too congested and the arcade is in a basement and not a suitable place for young people."

Alderman Ronald Marini, who grew up in Nonantum and represents the area in question, explained the legislative process to the teen-agers. After the meeting, he said he is not entirely sympathetic to their plight.

"The kids have plenty of places to go," Marini said. "The Newton Boys Club is just two blocks away. I understand their concerns, but I don't know that spending all their money on video games is a good way to spend their time, anyway."

and deliberate attempt to mislead the citizens," McGrath says.

The memo states that "The (UDBC) members said they have not voted to accept any such guidelines that the chairman discusses to the press and others and that any such guidelines are his own and that he should so state.

"There was a general and heated discussion regarding the Turnpike Corridor Urban Planning Study (TCUPS)," the memo says. "It was the consensus of those present that the proposals regarding TCUPS that have been discussed publicly, and in the press, are the chairman's and do not represent the views of the commission. Rolce (Payne) and Alex (Frisch) reminded the chairman that the commission voted July 10, 1985, to request the chairman to prepare a draft report and that the chairman has not yet presented the draft to the commission for a vote. The chairman maintained that his proposals have been adopted by the commission by virtue of what he considered to be extensive discussion. The chairman has not prepared a written report."

Morris denies allegations that he "usurped" the committee's authority by making his presentation to the Ward 2 committee.

"I never represented that this is the final report," he says. "On page two of the draft report, there is a disclaimer that the report was for discussion only. The only people representing it as a UDBC report were the newspapers."

Ward 2 Committee Chairman Martina Jackson, however, says she invited Morris to speak "on behalf of the UDBC."

"We asked him to speak to our committee in his role as chairman," she says. "He said in his opening remarks that he was empowered to do so. Given that the UDBC has the right to discuss air rights, given that he is the chairman and given that he is the one who made the presentation, he is the one we called."

McGrath also has questioned whether the UDBC has any business discussing air rights at all. According to City Clerk Edward English, the commission, originally known as the Urban Beautification Commission, was charged with discussing air rights when it was formed in 1975.

"The Urban Beautification Commission (UBC) was adopted Dec. 15, 1975," English says, quoting the commission's enabling act. "The name has since been amended to the Urban Design and Beautification Commission. It was formed for the preservation, improvement and development of the physical environment of the city."

The ordinance creating the UBC, according to English, gives it power to make "studies of urban beautification techniques for implementing such programs, meetings and seminars, advice upon request of the mayor, Board of Aldermen and School Committee, including but not limited to landscaping of new streets, parks, playgrounds and public areas, public and private parking lots, air-rights construction, municipal buildings, private buildings, gasoline station design and landscaping."

Morris says because the ordinance charges the UDBC with discussing the future of air-rights development, it is his duty to do so.

"Who will develop guidelines to control air-rights development over the Turnpike?" Morris asks. "Should it be Dick McGrath in the sprinkler business? Baloney. This city needs people responsible for designing a long-range plan for development. We need professional advice and right now we aren't getting it."

Air rights flap prompts resignation

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — At least one member of the Urban Design and Beautification Commission (UDBC) is resigning as a result of the controversial air-rights draft report delivered to the Jan. 16 Ward 2 Democratic Committee meeting by UDBC Chairman Glenn Morris.

Rolce Payne, a charter member of the 10-year-old commission, sent a letter of resignation to Mayor Theodore Mann last week.

"This was not in any sense what this commission was supposed to be doing and I sent a letter to the mayor giving my reasons," Payne says. "My main feeling is that I think that it should be publically stated that these are Glenn Morris' plans, not those of the Urban Design and Beautification Commission."

Morris' report to the Ward 2 committee proposed limiting air-rights development over the Massachusetts Turnpike to the villages of Newton Corner and Newtonville. It also included specific height and floor space limitations.

Payne says that Morris was not supposed to present the draft report on behalf of the UDBC.

"This whole business with Glenn Morris started in the fall with his giving an interview over the air-rights development and his saying it was a unanimous decision," Payne says. "In fact, it was not a unanimous decision. I am opposed to air-rights. I don't think this city can handle any more development of that magnitude. We clearly discussed this and I didn't see any reason to encourage people to think about development that publishing (Morris' draft report) would be doing."

Payne says she and other UDBC members objected to Morris' report before he presented it to the Ward 2 committee.

"Glenn persisted in this," she says. "The commission voted to let him develop ideas and present them to us, not the public. We had not seen those plans he presented. On Dec. we discussed several things. We had made a motion that the chairman was not to go out and speak in public. He was supposed to say he was giving only his own ideas. When I saw it in the papers, I was very upset."

Morris downplays Payne's comments.

"Rolce Payne is anti-development," he says. "She has been resigning for a long time because of a lack of city support for the commission. Now, all of a sudden she wakes up one day and says we don't want to do this any more."

Two other UDBC members, however, back up Payne's contention that Morris usurped the commission's authority.

"To be perfectly honest," UDBC member Alexander Frisch says, "a number of months ago Glenn mentioned to the commission that he would like to take up the topic of air-rights. We brought up as a group that we didn't want to encourage it. He mentioned that he wasn't encouraging it, but air-rights development would happen, anyway, without the guidelines.

"About late fall we took a vote on the issue," he continues. "That vote simply allowed Glenn Morris to draw up a draft. It was the unanimous opinion of everyone at the meeting that we would look over it and study it. He took that to mean he had a free hand in the name of the commission, which he determined unilaterally to be a synopsis of the discussion. People are putting their hands up in frustration."

Frisch says he has considered resigning.

Frank vs. the Moral Majority

legislative decisions based on their values.

"When one becomes a Christian, one adopts a new value system and re-learns how to think all over again, and then one incorporates a new value system based on moral absolutes," Crowell said.

"Some may look at this as brainwashing, but when my brain was washed, it came clean," he said. The morality of liberal politicians differs from that of the founding fathers, Crowell said.

"Political liberals call themselves progressive, but I'm not sure what they are progressing to," Crowell said. "Their value systems are based on relativity rather than moral absolutes."

Frank said he would not want to see government dictate to people what ought to be private choice.

"There is a need for a separation from what government should be doing in society and what should be left up to individual choice," Frank said. "The Moral Majority wants to put government in areas where they have no business being, and government has to draw lines in those areas."

Legislative decisions by public officials is based on moral principals, not on one religion, Frank said.

"The Constitution guarantees the freedom of religion, and this is missing in the Moral Majority's approach," Frank said.

Government has moral obligations to ensure the abolition of racism, yet Crowell supports the South African government and thus, apartheid, Frank said.

"These are actions of immorality, yet he supports them," Frank said. "It is the role of government to protect individual autocracy. Freedom is always better than coercion," he said.

Frank said Crowell is wrong to impose his personal religious values on the words of the Constitution.

"People have every right to believe in what they want, and the arrogance of the Moral Majority and their misuse of religion, by claiming their way is the only true way, is far from what our founding fathers had in mind," Frank said.

"Under our Constitution, no religion dictates to government and that's the way it should be," Frank said.

Several members of the audience attacked Crowell for his "elitist" religious philosophy, contending he disregards human rights and religious freedom.

"You're proposing a religiously elitist country, disregarding the diversity of religious beliefs that people hold dear," Rabbi Albert Goldstein said. "A democracy is not supposed to be based on elitist thought."

Crowell was asked to comment on the morality of the founding fathers, who were slave owners. Crowell said he could not justify their unchristian choice.

Marilyn Sicurella said she was disturbed by Crowell's reference to the United States as a "Christian" nation and by his disregard for other religions.

"I think Crowell's ideology is dangerous and impinges on the rights of others," Frank said. "He has no basis to say his religious values are imbedded in our Constitution. I think he better go back and do a little more research before I could ever be convinced of his arguments."

According to Crowell, his orthodox conservative Christianity is the only true religion.

"I believe my religion is the correct one because it is so plain in the scripture. We are looking for moral sanity in our government," Crowell said.

Newton resident Irene Woods said the Moral Majority is not moral at all. "They are rather the 'immoral minority,'" Woods said. "I find Crowell and his religious presumptions disgusting. When six million Jews were being burned in Nazi Germany, where were his moral Christians? Where were they when this country turned away thousands of Jews from landing here when they were escaping Germany? He wants only Christians, and everyone else can go to hell as far as he's concerned," Woods said.

Crowell said he does not believe he is any better than anyone else.

"I don't feel I'm better than any of you here, I'm just grateful I've been saved," Crowell said. "Christianity is not my way, it's the Lord's way."

Cablevision gives priority to emergency announcements

NEWTON — Continental Cablevision of Newton reminds residents to tune to Cable Channel 3 for announcements of townwide emergencies and instructions this winter.

Continental Cablevision will give priority to emergency announcement requests from the Newton Police Department. These announcements will over ride programming on the Newton Channel, Cable Channel 3, which usually features the community bulletin board and locally produced programming.

According Steven Mazzola, program director of the Newton Channel, as the bad weather season approaches, local snow emergencies, travel conditions, and school closings will be announced along with information on power outages, and emergency instructions.

The Newton Channel emergency service will not only inform residents in the winter months, but year-round, should emergency measures be necessary.

Chinese visitors say goodbye

Completing the first ever Chinese student/teacher visit with an American public school system, a delegation from Newton said goodbye on Jan. 26 to their six guests who have lived with host families and studied in the city's schools since August.

The historic visit was five years in the making, beginning with a chance meeting in Beijing between Newton teacher Claire Kanter and Fang Bi Hui, a master teacher at Jingshan, a government, laboratory school. As the two women corresponded, their friendship grew, and eventually a group of Newton teachers and administrators visited Jingshan twice to lecture specifically on special education and teaching English as a foreign language.

A member of the 1984 delegation, Superintendent John Strand has been closely involved with the program. At a farewell committee meeting for the Chinese at his house, he said, "In view of the success of this five-month visit — which for us has produced a Chinese language and culture course for high school students among many other achievements — we have formally proposed that four of our students and two teachers live and study with Jingshan teachers and administrators and their families next fall."

"We recently received a telephone call from Beijing, and they have indicated their planning was underway," Strand said. "The final step is to get formal approval from their Bureau of Higher Education."

Village gift shop offers craft classes

NEWTON— The Village Gift Terminal, located in the historic 1852 railroad depot at the corner of Chestnut and Oak Streets in Newton Upper Falls (across from the Chestnut St. Complex & just a few blocks from Marshall's Mall), is now accepting enrollments for afternoon, evening and Saturday craft classes. Pre-registration for classes in beginners quilting, cross-stitch, kitchen witches, fabric frames, basket lining and jointed teddy bears is required. Classes will begin in mid-February. Also available at the VGT, in addition to quality handcrafts and unique gifts, is the 1986 Newton Calendar by James Wrye which depicts "Visions of Newton's Past" through his sketches of early Newton structures. Store hours are Tues.-Sat. 10 a.m. - 5 p.m. and until 9 p.m. on Thursdays when classes are in session.

City will spot check firms for smoking law

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

For the first time since the law was established in June, 1984, the Newton Health Department will be spot checking local businesses to ensure compliance of the smoking ordinance.

A team of four public health nurses, plus Adult Health Coordinator Beverly Sorge, plan to check two companies per week to ensure they have posted a smoking policy for their employees, according to Sorge.

"We want to make sure they have a policy and that it's posted," she explained. "If not we want to find out why and encourage them to get one up quickly."

Although the ordinance states that companies not in compliance with the law are subject to a $50 fine, Sorge said the noncomplying companies would not be fined as the spot checks are merely to serve as a warning.

"Our goal is to make sure they know the ordinance exists and to get it posted," she said.

The health department decided to start spot checking at the request of the Health Advisory Council.

According to Sorge, the council is "interested in seeing how (the ordinance) is doing." The ordinance was established over 1½ years ago.

So far, the smoking law has brought about one complaint in regards to the lack of a smoking policy. It turned out the company had a policy, Sorge said, but it was not posted.

Mostly, however, the health department has received numerous requests for information on the ordinance.

"So many times people call and say, 'I heard there was something about an ordinance,'" said Sorge.

In order to educate Newton employers about the smoking ordinance, the health department will "work with them and help them" establish a policy, said Sorge.

"We want to be as fair as we can," she said. "If we go in later and they still don't have a policy, then they'll be fined."

The smoking ordinance states that:

— Each employer in the City of Newton establish and post a written policy governing smoking in the workplace. The policy may be uniform or may vary between different areas throughout the workplace. It may also include the designation of smoking and non-smoking locations.

— In drafting the policy, each employer must make a reasonable effort to determine the needs of employees relative to the required policy, through a joint committee of labor and management, through interviews with employees, through questionaires completed by employees or through any other appropriate method which allows broad employee participation.

— Each employer must adopt and implement a smoking policy within six months of the adoption of the ordinance.

— Each employer must review and revise, if necessary, its policy not later than 12 months after the original implementation and not less than every two years thereafter.

— If an employee objects to the impact of the policy, he/she may write employers of their objections and the employer must mediate the employees' objection.

— If the employee is still not satisfied, or if the employer has not taken action of complaints within 30 days, the employee may file a complaint with the City of Newton's Health Department, which will investigate the complaint and make the necessary changes if the complaint is deemed reasonable.

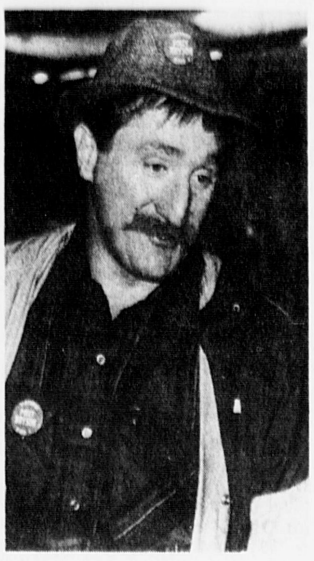
— Any party dissatisfied with the Health Department's resulting order may take the case to court;

— Employers found not to be in compliance with the provisions of the ordinance are subject to a fine of $50 for each 30 day period of non-compliance.

Support sought for new building ban

From page 1

Paulini countered criticism that the vote had little meaning because of poor voter turnout by pointing out that election day "was a miserable day with driving rain." In addition, he said he has the support of more than 10,000 voters.



Tom Paulini

"More than 5,200 voters favored the ballot question," he said, "and we have a like number of voters who signed a petition to get a binding referendum question on the ballot that was ruled illegal by the Law Department."

Aside from questions about the legitimacy of the election results, moratorium opponents point to the work of the recently adjourned Zoning Review Committee (ZRC) and the Village Study as better alternatives for dealing with development.

Former Planning Director and ZRC member Charles Thomas said a moratorium is "too broad and focuses development in areas where it is still permitted."

"The pressure for development is exercised by those developments that are still possible," he said before the hearing. "For every development that does not apply, developers would try to find the odd lot available where they do, taking away what little bits of open space exists that is valuable."

Thomas said the concerns brought up by moratorium supporters — increased citizen control of development — were addressed by the ZRC report.

"There needs to be some review before a development appears in the neighborhood," he said. "The ZRC has addressed those concerns by additions to provisions of the zoning review processes, affording community groups opportunity to see plans for development rather than simply finding out about them when construction starts."

Aldermen Richard McGrath, Polly Bryson and George Mansfield spoke in favor of the petition, saying the ZRC report will not be ready for "months" and that a moratorium should be imposed until the ZRC recommendations are implemented.

Sheila Mennell, speaking on behalf of the Greater Boston Real Estate Board, said a moratorium would affect the city's economy adversely.

"The moratorium is an emotional and complex issue," she said, "that would cause a loss of revenue in real estate taxes felt immediately by abatements from property that is assessed for its potental for development. A loss of revenue would necessitate a loss in services or an increase in the residential taxes already deemed too high by the residents of this city."

A hand count at the end of the discussion showed moratorium supporters outnumbered opponents 45-15. The petition is expected to be assigned to a working session of the committee at a later date.

Man arraigned for lewd behavior

AUBURNDALE — A 24-year-old Allston man was arraigned in district court Monday on a charge of open and gross lewdness. William Camilli pleaded not guilty to the charge and was released on personal recognizance. The defendant allegedly displayed lewd behavior to three young girls at the Riverside MBTA stop. The case was continued to Feb. 25.

Vandals break Hereford Road windows

WABAN — Two large sliding glass windows at a home on Hereford Road were broken by vandals Sunday night, police said. According to police, vandals threw a statue through one of the windows and a rock through the other.

Tools stolen from Lill Avenue home

WEST NEWTON — Assorted tools valued at $900 were stolen from an enclosed rear porch at a home on Lill Avenue Saturday night, police said.

Woman injured in two-car accident

CHESTNUT HILL — Nancy B. Bloom, a 37-year-old Newton woman, was injured in a two-car accident near Boston College Sunday. Bloom was transported to Newton-Wellesley Hospital, police said.

Bloom was driving eastbound on Beacon Street when her vehicle was hit in the rear by a second car that was turning right onto Beacon Street from Lawrence Avenue, police said. According to police, Bloom lost control of her car when the impact occurred, crashing into a tree on Beacon Street.

Burglary at The Ledges Road home

NEWTON — A television and some costume jewelry were stolen out of a home on The Ledges Road, according to a report received by police Saturday night. The front door had been forced open.

Ford van burglarized on Farwell Street

NEWTONVILLE — A car parked on Farwell Street was broken into last week, police said. The thieves broke a window of the 1980 Ford van, and police said a tool box, assorted power tools and the vehicle's battery were stolen. According to police, the value of the stolen property is approximately $400.

Live-in babysitter scares off intruder

CHESTNUT HILL — An intruder attempted to break into a Reservoir Avenue home last week, but was scared off by a live-in babysitter who called out to see who was there, police said. According to police, the intruder broke a window on the first floor, but never gained entrance into the dwelling. The intruder is described as a white, blond-haired man of about 18, who was wearing a black leather jacket, police said.

Youth assaulted on Parkway stairs

CHESTNUT HILL — A 15-year-old Newton boy was assaulted last Monday on Hammond Pond Parkway stairs leading to the Chestnut Hill Mall. Police said the youth was approached by five boys who wanted money. When the Newton boy refused to give them money, he was punched in the stomach, police said. According to police, $5 was stolen.

Thief breaks into Dudley Road house

OAK HILL - A home on Dudley Road was broken into last week, police said. The thief gained entrance to the dwelling by kicking in the front door. According to police, a bureau drawer was ransacked in the master bedroom and a gold bracelet was stolen. The house alarm apparently deterred the thief, police said.

Attempted break on Longfellow Road

NEWTON LOWER FALLS — Intruders attempted to break into a house on Longfellow Road last week, police said. Two days later a resident reported that someone had tried to jimmy open her breezeway door, but no entrance was gained, police said.

Burglary attempt on Needham Street

NEWTON HIGHLANDS — There was an attempted burglary at the New England Book Fair on Needham Street last Wednesday, police said. According to police, an employee discovered that someone tried to jimmy the main door open.

VCR stolen from Linwood Ave. home

WEST NEWTON — A home on Linwood Avenue was broken into last Wednesday, police said. A $600 VCR was stolen.

Officer to appeal conviction in April

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Police officer Brian Henderson will appeal his assault and battery conviction on April 7 before the Cambridge 'Jury of Six.'

The appeal date was set during a recent pretrial conference, according to Thomas Samoluk, spokesman for Middlesex County District Attorney Scott Harshbarger.

On Jan. 6 in Newton District Court, Henderson was found guilty of assaulting Waltham resident Michael Colarusso with a dangerous weapon. The Jury of Six hears appeals of district court convictions.

Henderson was accused of assaulting Colarusso with a night stick on Sept. 28 at around 11:30 p.m., according to Assistant District Attorney Paul Kelley, who tried the case in Newton District Court.

The alleged assault took place while Henderson was guarding the back of Officer Stephen Walsh, who was struggling with Colarusso's wife, Naomi, Kelley said after the Jan. 6 trial.

Henderson and Walsh were responding to the report of a fight in progress when the incident occurred, Kelley said.

Naomi Colarusso had been arguing with a tenant at 81 West St. and Walsh testified that because she is tall and he was approaching her from behind he did not realize she was a woman, Kelley said.

Henderson testified that Michael Colarusso was rushing towards Walsh and his wife when the assault occurred, Kelley said. Michael Colarusso said he was heading towards his son, who was alone in the street, Kelley said.

The maximum penalty for the charge is 2 1/2 years in jail, Kelley said.

Swim meet crowd evacuated

High school fire causes $25,000 in damages

By David Weber
Staff Writer

NEWTON — A suspicious fire in the basement of Newton North High School Saturday afternoon caused an estimated $25,000 in damage to the gym building and forced the evacuation of about 50 persons who were watching a swim meet.

The fire was confined to the girls' locker room. Although fire department officials would not definitely say the fire was set, the evidence suggests it was. Officials said the state Fire Marshall would be notified.

Because the fire was in the basement and the locker room had no windows, it was difficult to ventilate the blaze.

"The fire was very, very hot and the smoke was thick. Visibility was zero. It was an extremely difficult fire to fight," said Assistant Chief Joseph S. Daniele. He said the light fixtures on the ceiling of the room melted. Seven ventilation fans, or "smoke ejectors," had to be used along with a mobile lighting unit before two separate fires, about eight feet apart, were found and quickly extinguished.

Daniele said clothing, shower curtains and gym equipment were among the items burning when the fires were located. The fire and water damage was confined to the locker room, but there was smoke damage throughout the building, with a lot of soot left behind.

A heat detector in the room automatically caused an alarm to be sounded shortly before 5 p.m. The fire did not go beyond one alarm, but an extra ladder truck was called to the scene so the mobile lighting plant could be used.

Assistant Chief Edward J. Murphy was in charge of operations at the fire scene. Nobody was injured in the blaze.

Auxiliary officer recognized

NEWTON — Ann Muxie of Watertown, president of Law Enforcement Post 300 Norumbega Council and a Newton Police Auxiliary Patrolman, won the Explorer Presidents' Association Award.

This award was presented to Muxie at the Marriott Hotel in Newton on Jan. 12 at the Recognition Dinner hosted by Explorer Post 519. Kevin Binnall, program director of E.P.A., presented the award which is given to an explorer who shows zealous and mature leadership in his or her post. The entire post was present to congratulate Muxie on her achievement.

Muxie is attending Massachusetts Bay Community College and is majoring in criminal justice. She is a three-year member of the Explorer Post, an affiliate section of the Boy Scouts of America.

Frank to talk on February 10

NEWTON — The League of Women Voters of Newton will host a rescheduled evening with U.S. Rep. Barney Frank at the First Baptist Church in Newton Centre on Monday, Feb. 10, at 6:30 p.m.

Social hour and potluck dinner supplied by league members from Newton, Boston, Cambridge, Waltham, and Watertown, and Wellesley will be followed by the congressman's remarks at 8 p.m.

Rep. Frank has been asked to address league concerns such as disarmament and arms control, and the budget deficit, toxic waste clean-up efforts (superfund) and tax reform.

League members from Boston and surrounding communities will discuss the national league program for the next two years.

All league members, prospective members and members of the press are coordially invited to attend. There will be a charge of $3 per person for supper. For further information, call 969-0686.

Gardening at home is now a growing trend

By Eric Jude
Copley News Service

Family life, becoming increasingly complex in many ways, is returning to older ways in at least one area: Increasing numbers of families are growing more of their own food at home.

In fact, gardening expert Dorrie Sellman says the do-it-yourself digging and planting families of the United States could well meet 50 percent of the nation's vegetable needs by the year 2000.

About 29 million gardening families currently are cultivating an acre or less to grow vegetables for home consumption, said Sillman, who runs the quality control lab for the Mantis National Gardening Club in Huntingdon Valley, Pa. Part of her job is advising gardening families.

"Gardeners are always exchanging data about new plants and new tools that make our greening more fun. The pleasure and sense of accomplishment is a stimulating experience that only gardeners can savor," Stillman said.

Here are common questions with answers from Sillman, often called the Ann Landers of gardening:

Q. My husband and I are retired. We both have arthritis but we are determined to keep it at bay with light exercise in a garden. We're determined to grow some of our own food, but digging and weeding is a backbreaking job. Is there an easier way to get started?

A. Sure. Start by setting aside a modest space for your first garden — don't make it too big. Then, look for lightweight equipment that will help you pursue your pastime. For example, Mantis makes a tiller that weighs only 20 pounds. To combat weeds, you'll need a portable sprayer that does double duty as a watering device. A shredder will turn most of your garden and kitchen waste into compost that replenishes the soil.

With the right kind of lightweight equipment, many retired people get out and garden each day — and never think about aching joints for weeks on end.

Q. Last year we tried to grow corn, beans and tomatoes. Only about half of our plants grew to any worthwhile size. What happened?

A. A successful garden starts with good soil. A soil test will tell you if yours has sufficient nutrients. Ask for soil test kits at garden stores, or get a local cooperative extension service to analyze a soil sample for you.

Q. We're new to gardening. Our soil is red clay, which we doubt is the best. Can we improve it?

A. Certainly. Just add compost, organic material that "feeds" your soil by enhancing its ability to hold moisture and air.

Leaves, hay, grass clippings and even kitchen leftovers make good compost. Don't throw this good stuff away. Use it.

Chop up garden or kitchen waste with a power chipper. Place this organic material in a compost pile where oxygen and microorganisms will decompose it. When it's ready, till it into the soil for organic enrichment.

You also can add nutrients to soil by planting "green manure" — buckwheat or annual rye grass — in your garden.

Schedule for planting in the fall. Then in the spring, till this growth into the soil as part of your garden preparation. Five pounds of buckwheat seeds yields hundreds of pounds of organic matter — one of the best bargains in gardening.

Q. We cultivate less than an acre, yet we're constantly battling weeds. What can we do?

A. There's a relatively easy remedy — prevent weed germination in the first place. Since annual weeds germinate ¼-inch to ½-inch down into the soil, a shallow tilling eliminates most of them.

Perennial weeds germinate deeper. Attack perennials at the soil's surface to rob them of leaves that supply sunlight and water. Cultivate every week for several weeks to destroy perennials.

Q. We've just built a new home and are ready to start landscaping. Can you tell us how to ensure a great lawn?

A. The work is simple, but exacting. Start off with good drainage — a critical factor for a healthy lawn. Slope your lawn slightly away from your house in all directions.

Now till the soil. Don't whip it into a fine fluff — you're not making chocolate cream pie. Just loosen it. Leave some pea-size lumps and crevices to catch the seeds.

Grade a second time, then seed thinly, allowing room for grass root systems to develop. Rake lightly to cover about half of the seeds with soil. Roll the ground to press seeds into contact with soil. Keep your newly planted area throroughly moist for at least two weeks. Soon, as my Irish neighbor says, you'll be "a wearing o' the green."

How you can build a stereo on a budget

By the Editors of
Consumers Reports

It's easy to spend a lot for a stereo system. But if your budget is limited, Consumer Reports' electronics engineers say that you can still assemble a basic stereo component system that will deliver good quality sound for less than $500.

If this will be a starter system, all you really need is a receiver, speakers, either a compact disc player or a turntable and phono cartridge, and possibly a cassette deck. Any one component is compatible with any of the other recommended components for the engineers' recommended low-priced stereo system.

The receiver is the control center for the stereo system. It contains the AM/FM radio as well as knobs and switches to adjust volume, tone and stereo balance. Four highly rated receivers to consider for the system, listed in alphabetical order, are the Pioneer SXV200, Realistic STA115, Sony STRAV260 and Ultrx R35. They're priced at $210 or less; sizable discounts are common.

Loudspeakers are also essential for a stereo system. More than any other component, the speakers are responsible for the quality of sound that your system delivers.

Five highly rated speakers recommended by the electronics engineers, listed alphabetically, are the Boston Acoustics A40 and A60, the EPI T/E70, JBL J216A and Pioneer CSG201WA. (The Boston Acoustics A60 and the Pioneer speakers did a better job of reproducing loud, deep bass than the others.) The recommended speakers list for $200 or less, before discounts.

CD players deliver superb audio quality. The quality of their discs is also very good and they're becoming more readily available and in greater variety.

The engineers' choices for compact disc players include the Emerson CD150, discounted at less than $200, and the Sony D5, at around $220, discounted. Besides using the Sony player as part of a hi-fi system, it can also be used independently with earphones, or portably with its $50 battery pack and carrying case.

If want to play LPs, you'll still need a traditional turntable and phono cartridge, since you can't play ordinary records on a CD player. Turntables recommended for the system include the Pioneer PL660BLK, Sony PSLX240, Sony PSLX340 and the Technics SLBD35. All four have a tone arm that takes a convenient, plug-in phono cartridge. The Technics, at $150, list, was the most expensive of the four, but you should pay considerably less after discounts.

Phono cartridges recommended for the system include the Audio-Technica AT112EP, Ortofon TM7 and Shure M99E. The Audio-Technica emphasizes the extreme treble more than the others, making recordings sound a bit brighter. The phono cartridges retail for $75 or less, and may be discounted substantially.

A cassette deck is also a handy component for a stereo system. It can be used to play back commercially recorded music, to record programs from the radio, or to copy an LP for safekeeping. Six decks were recommended for the low-priced system.

Three use the Dolby B noise reduction method. (You get less background noise with Dolby B.) They are, in alphabetical order, the Akai HXA101M, Sony TCFX 220 and Teac V316. The rest use both Dolby B and Dolby C. (Dolby C is preferable for taping live music or compact discs.)

Striking a balance in development

By Ted M. Natt Jr.
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — The texture of Boston, once primarily a low-slung city of red-brick buildings, is changing dramatically as high-rises of steel, concrete and glass emerge from its narrow streets.

"This growth spurt has dropped several towers on us, some of which are undistinguishable from Dallas or elsewhere," said Antonia Pollak, executive director of the Boston Preservation Alliance, a coalition of 30 historical societies. "Somehow we need to try and retain the character of Boston."

Larry Bluestone, co-chairman of the Boston Society of Architects' urban design committee, agrees.

"There is the threat that development could go on helter-skelter and tip the balance so that the old Boston would be lost," said Bluestone.

He noted that developers must follow city guidelines that require new buildings to respect the architectural and historic context of Boston, but there is a paucity of zoning laws and controls in the city.

And the Boston Redevelopment Authority, which oversees development in the city, has taken a big step toward restoring the downtown's architectural fabric through its restrictions on the size and number of new buildings and on materials used in their construction.

In the downtown financial district, where the greatest flurry has taken place, mild blends of old and new often have been accomplished, such as in the combined Gothic and art deco styles of the Batterymarch Building of offices.

Yet there are pockets of hodgepodge.

On the corner of Oliver and High streets, the granite-clad 20-story Paine Webber building, which looks like a bank vault with windows, sits across from a quaint, six-story 19th century red-brick office building.

On another corner, sits an insurance company headquarters built about 1960 that looks like 16 suburban grammar schools stacked on top of one another.

"The Traveler's in one of the worst buildings in Boston," said David Dixon, co-chairman of the BSA's urban design committee. "Everything about it does not resemble its surroundings."

Nearby, the steel skeleton of International Place has begun to rise from the ground. The project is designed as a cluster of five elements around a central, glass-roofed public "Crystal Court." The tallest component is a 46-story, 600-foot high cylindrical tower. It will be twice as tall as any of the buildings around it.

Ms. Pollak suggested that workers in buildings near International Place may have to buy plastic plants once the project is completed because they will never see the sun again.

Most observors say that while there is certain to never be harmony, builders are at least considering the aesthetic impact of their projects on surrounding structures.

"A lot of new development has paid a lot more attention to the skyline of the city," said Paul Reavis, chief senior architect with the BRA. "There's a whole awareness now of how buildings appear on the skyline."

"You have to design a building that suits our time and compliments its surroundings so that it looks like it's always belonged," said Howard F. Elkus, a principal with The Architects Collaborative of Cambridge, the firm that designed Copley Place in Boston's Back Bay.

The most extreme attempts to mix the modern with the old are through a process known as "facadectomy."

A 40-story glass skyscraper was built within the Victorian facade of the old Boston Stock Exchange building. And a 21-story granite tower is being built behind the brick facade of the former Kennedy's department store.

But critics say much of the new construction overpowers the old architecture.

"I think Exchange Place is a real intrusion into the old downtown Boston," said Dixon. "It's an example of why facadectomy doesn't work."

In an attempt to appease preservationists, however, some developers are finding facadism a practical way of building modern high-rises. In some instances, they say, it can be a good compromise to a tough problem.

And there is still a strong appreciation of the old city of Boston and the materials used to build it — bricks, granite and elaborate masonry.

Advisory on space heaters

BOSTON — Concerned about potential exposure to lead and other toxic substances, the Massachusetts Department of Public Welfare today issued an advisory to persons who own and operate space heaters that burn used oil. DPH urges these persons to be sure that exhaust gases from such burning are vented to outside air.

There are two types of space heaters that are designed to burn waste oil: vaporizing and atomizing burners. Vaporizing burners operate by heating a film of oil below the combustion zone to cause vaporization of the oil, which is then burned. Atomizing burners use low-pressure air to create an atomized mist of oil in the combustion zone, and the mist is burned.

In some workplaces, especially garages, service stations, etc., used oil is burned in space heaters to heat the workplace.

Tips on renegotiating mortgages

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

I have a 16 percent mortgage on my second home. Mortgage interest rates are much lower now than they were when I purchased the home, and I am receiving conflicting advice on whether or not to renegotiate the loan. Is there a simple way to calculate whether or not this would be worth my while?

R.L. Brookline

Dear R.L.:

Once a mortgage loan has been established, the normal tendency is to forget about it. However, interest on fixed rate mortgages, which soared above 18 percent in some areas a few years ago, has dropped substantially — by as much as four or five points. A homeowner paying a high rate has to consider whether it makes sense to renegotiate the mortgage, even in the face of steep prepayment penalties and new closing costs.

Some of the expenses of renegotiating may be avoidable if the new mortgage is with the lender who made the original loan. But the lender may not wish to renegotiate, or may have sold the original mortgage to the Federal National Mortgage Assoc. (Fannie Mae), or to some other mortgage pool.

The rule of thumb is that the new interest rate should be at least three points below the old one. However, calculating the specific numbers that apply in one's own case will provide a much more dependable answer.

The best way to compare monthly charges at various interest rates is with the help of mortgage payment tables, although it can also be done with approximations. The income tax deduction factor will almost certainly have to be approximated, since neither tax rates nor a family's income can be predicted. And if there are any "points" to be paid, they should be included in the computation.

What follows is a simple guide to assist you in making these calculations. You may need to do a bit of research on your old mortgage, and also on the current rates available. If your new mortgage has a different term from the old one, it may be necessary to reduce both to the actuarial "present value" to make the two comparable. Your financial planner can help make this determination.

Senior menus

NEWTON — West Suburban Elder Services, Inc. in cooperation with the Council on Aging, administers nutrition sites at the Newton Senior Center (552-7178), the Newton Corner Senior Drop-In Center (969-8030), the Nonantum Multi-Service Center (965-6390) and a kosher nutrition site at Congregation Beth El-Atereth Israel (244-7233) for persons 60 and older. Meals are served at noon. Reservations for lunch should be made at least 24 hours in advance by calling the desired location. Also, a light Thursday evening supper is provided at the Newton Senior Center. There is no charge for meals but a 75-cent donation is requested. Transportation to the nutrition sites is provided by Centre Transportation, Inc. Reservations for transportation are required and can be made by calling 969-1418.

All menus are subject to change. This week's menu is as follows:

Thursday, Jan. 29: Meatloaf/gravy, Italian lentil soup or O'Brien potato, crackers, green beans, wheat bread, peach shortcake.

Friday, Jan. 30: Turkey teriyaki, oriental rice, orange juice, chow mein noodles, oatmeal bread, cookie.

Inexpensive modes of transportation for the older person

NEWTON — Mrs. A.: I'm having a very tough time getting to all the places I need to get to in order to conduct my life. I don't have a car and I need to get to the supermarket, doctor's office, visit my cousin in the nursing home, and sometimes I'd like to go someplace just for the fun of it. There must be a way for an older person to get around that isn't terribly expensive. You know, costs can add up quickly.

What's out there that can help me?

Mr. C.: There are a number of services that you can access to help with your problem.

1. Taxi - If you use a Newton taxi service you should know that a senior citizen (people over 60) can purchase discount coupons. Some taxi companies offer 10 percent discounts and others 15 percent. Ask the taxi company you regularly do business with if they have the reduced fare coupons, what their rate of discount is and what the cost vs. face value of the coupons are. At the end of the year, depending on the frequency of use, you could see a substantial savings.

2. MBTA - Bus and Green Line - If you use the MBTA Bus system you can get a photo I.D. pass, if you're 65, and ride for 10¢ a trip locally or half the adult fare beyond a local trip.

If you don't have the required I.D. card you can get one in Boston at the "Senior Citizens/Special Needs" office at the Washington Street station concourse, at the opposite end of Jordan's and Filene's Basement. The office is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to noon and 1 p.m. until 3:30 p.m. If you want more information such as what they accept as verification of your age, call 722-5438. If you can wait until next fall to get an I.D. card, a representative of the MBTA will come to City Hall sometime in October or November to issue photo I.D. passes to eligible senior citizens and people with special needs. Watch the papers and check the Golden Times newsletter for exact time and date.

3. MBTA-RIDE - If you are disabled and not physically able to use public transportation, the MBTA has a service called "The Ride." An example of who "The Ride" serves includes people who are either unable or have extreme difficulty in walking, (as: people who use a walker or wheelchair) seeing and using stairs. People using "The Ride" must live within the service area, and, happily, all of Newton now is served by "The Ride." In order to register and get information about "The Ride" call 722-5123 or TTY 722-5415.

4. Essential Services - For transportation to essential services within Newton (medical appointments are a first priority) or outside Newton; as to Boston hospitals you can call Centre Transportation at 969-1418. You will need to make arrangements at least three days before you need the ride. Also, a rider must be 60 years old or older. There is a suggested donation of $1 for local trips and $5 per Boston trip.

5. Hot Lunch/Senior Centers - When you need a ride to the drop-in Center or other senior luncheon location you can call Centre Transportation at 969-1418 (two days in advance) to make arrangements. There is a 50 cents suggested donation for this trip.

6. Shoppers Bus - Grocery shopping can be done by using the "Shoppers Bus." The Newton Senior Shopers Bus goes to the supermarket shopping areas on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Different areas of the city are served on each of these days. To make arrangements to be picked up and determine which day and time serves your neighborhood call the Department of Human Services at Newton City Hall - 552-7170. The donation is $1 round trip. Assistance is provided with carrying groceries for those who need it.

Mrs. A.: These services can really save me a lot of money each month and I can get most of the necessities of life accomplished relatively easily.

Free films to be shown

WEST NEWTON — Charles River Counseling Center is presenting a free film series open to the public held Monday evenings, the Counseling Center located at 1069 Washington St. will be showing the following movies:

Aquinas: Based in wisdom

By Kevin C. Kennedy
News Editor

NEWTON CORNER — As Aquinas Junior College celebrates its 25th anniversary, it is with understandable pride that some of those who have kept it going — and growing — all these years point to the wisdom of its founders.

It is as if the original band of Sisters of St. Joseph, who decided in 1961 to branch off from the secretarial school they ran in Milton, looked into the future and saw the dramatic changes that would take place in the role of women in our society. Seeing the changes on the horizon, they took action.

They devised a unique institution that would offer young women the benefits of a liberal arts education while, at the same time, cultivating in them valuable secretarial skills and other marketable abilities that would allow for their employment immediately upon graduation. Later, they developed a liberal arts core program that would also offer students the option of going on to a four-year college after their work at Aquinas is completed.

In its "mission statement," the college's purpose is "to educate the students within an academic discipline to provide them with opportunities for immediate employment and continued education."

Echoing that statement, Diane Nahabedian, head of public relations for the school, said, "We are committed to a well-rounded education and skills. We are not a vocational school."

But those simple statements belie the magnitude of the challenge the founders of Aquinas Junior College accepted 25 years ago. Sister Margaret Joyce, president of the college, would be the first to point out that Aquinas' approach to education is a holistic one, dealing with the whole person. She referred to the official statement of mission, which says, "The primary purpose of the college is learning at the post-secondary level and the promotion of the growth and development of persons responsible to God and society.

"Essential to the identity of Aquinas Junior College is its commitment to Catholic principles, ideals and goals. The educational mission of the college, based on Judeo-Christian values, is communicated through the personal witness of the entire college community .... Members of the college community accept the responsibility of providing an atmosphere in which concern for the individual is shown, awareness of the role of women is increased and responsivess to the needs of society is affirmed."

"Responsiveness to the needs of society" is the principle that seems to have dictated the direction in which the college has expanded over the years. Begun in 1961 as Aquinas Secretarial School for Women, the school won its accreditation as a business school four years later. Five years after that, with a large new building as its main campus fixture, the school was approved as a junior college and it created a core of liberal arts courses.

Reacting to the changing needs of society, it began a program in early childhood development that would lead students into day care and nursery situations which were growing as mothers reentered the workplace. In 1975, just as it had won full accreditation by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges, the school embarked on a new course of study: a "medical assisting program."

A relaxed scene in the college hallway.

A year later, "responding to signs of the times," a continuing education program was developed to assist homemakers who decided they finally wanted to pursue a career. (A lifetime of career counselling and placement services goes along with a diploma from Aquinas, according to Sr. Margaret Joyce.)

More recently, the college set up a "childhood development center" on campus that includes a day care center on campus and serves as a virtual laboratory for those studying early childhood development.

Along the way, curricula have also been developed in legal and medical administration.

An interesting detail in the description of the courses offered in the medical secretary's field reveals a great deal about the college's commitment to feminism. A description of the "medical assistant program" suggests that courses offered allow the Aquinas graduate to assist a physician "in both the administrative and clinical aspects of her profession."

Sr. Margaret Joyce reaffirmed that a major concern of hers and of her colleagues is that they prepare students to assume the burgeoning responsibilities of women at home, at work and in their church. She said her task is not just to suggest that young women have an opportunity to shape their own futures, but also a responsibility to help shape the future of the society around them.

As an object lesson for all students, the entire school is run by women.

For all that the college has expanded over the years, it has remained careful, all the while, that it never lost the personal touch that has meant so much to its graduates. They have fanned out to take key positions in a variety of fields all over the greater Boston area, but they look back on their alma mater as a source of their success.

Pamela Piantosi's comments are representational when she describes how the discipline at Aquinas prepared her for her present dual occupation. She now runs her own word processing firm, "after ten years of working for other people." The 1976 graduate is also a town councillor in Watertown.

"There's no question about it," she said. "Aquinas set the stage for my growth. There's a uniqueness there. It develops you to realize you have some serious decisions to make.

"Aquinas really did set the style. They were always there if you fell. They gave you the support you required to grow as an individual."

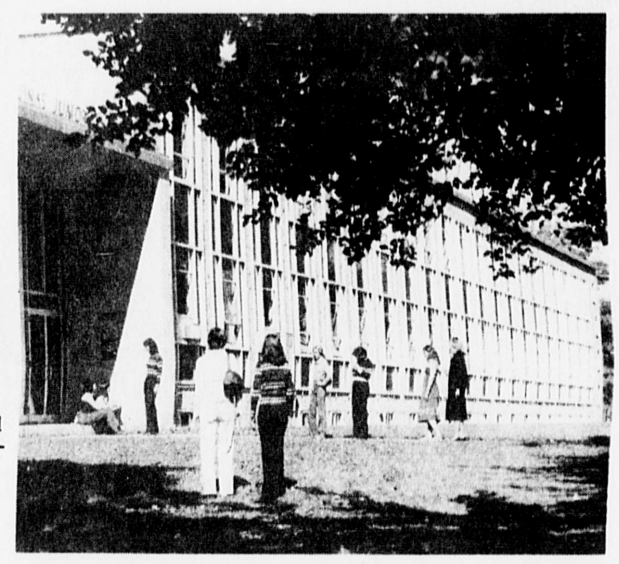
Regarding Aquinas' alerting her to the changing role of women in today's society, Piantosi pointed out that a course in theology was combined with a course called "Women in American Society" when she was there. "It was painful, especially in terms of facing reality," she said. "They forced you to get in touch with yourself and society. It's nice to be cushioned; but, when you leave there, you go out into the real world on your own."

The school moved into the 14-acre Flanagan estate 25 years ago. The building on the left — the former Flanagan home — is now the Montessori School.

Her word would have to prove satisfying for those first Sisters of St. Joseph who came to Newton Corner in 1961: Sisters Francis DeSales, Mari Ryan, Amabilis, Philomene Walsh, Marian Callahan, Rita McCarthy and Roberta Brown. They moved into the 14-acre estate of stockbroker Joseph Flanagan, whose daughter had joined the order, in Walnut Park and began teaching a freshman class of 62 students fundamental secretarial skills in a small stucco building on the grounds.

The focal point of campus activities is now a large two-story building, built in 1965, that houses 23 classrooms, a library, a cafeteria, an auditorium and administrative offices. The former Flanagan home now houses a Montessori School.

For all its growth, the original statement of purpose, formulated 25 years ago by a handful of visionaries, remains the same. For as much as the school has changed, the original promise to equip young women to make their marks on the world around them remains the same. While the means to that everchanging end will vary, especially with the advent of a formal development program, Aquinas Junior College will remain unique in its devotion to duty.



Today, most campus activities occur in a two-story building, constructed in 1965.

The founders of Aquinas Junior College pose near their new building.

Lisa Coopersmith and Kenneth Kranseler

Lisa K. Coopersmith will wed Kenneth B. Kranseler

Fred Coopersmith of Englewood, N.J. and Cindy Coopersmith of New City, N.Y. announce the engagement of their daughter, Lisa Karen, to Kenneth Barry Kranseler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur S. Kranseler of Framingham and Falmouth.

The bride-to-be is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, Wharton School of Business and is pursuing a masters degree in taxation at Bentley College of Business. She is employed in the tax department at Arthur Young Company in Boston.

The future bridegroom is also a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, Wharton School of Business and is employed as a management consultant at Bain and Co. in Boston.

The bridegroom's grandmother, Ethel Siegal, is a resident of Newton.

An August 1986 wedding is planned in Tarrytown, N.Y.

Susanna Stone is engaged to marry Robert McClure

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Stone of East Hampton, N.Y., announce the engagement of their daughter, Susanna, to Robert M. McClure, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. McClure of Newton. The future bride attended Wheaton College and is a 1985 graduate of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

The bridegroom-to-be is a 1982 graduate of Newton North High School and will graduate in May from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst with a degree in geology.

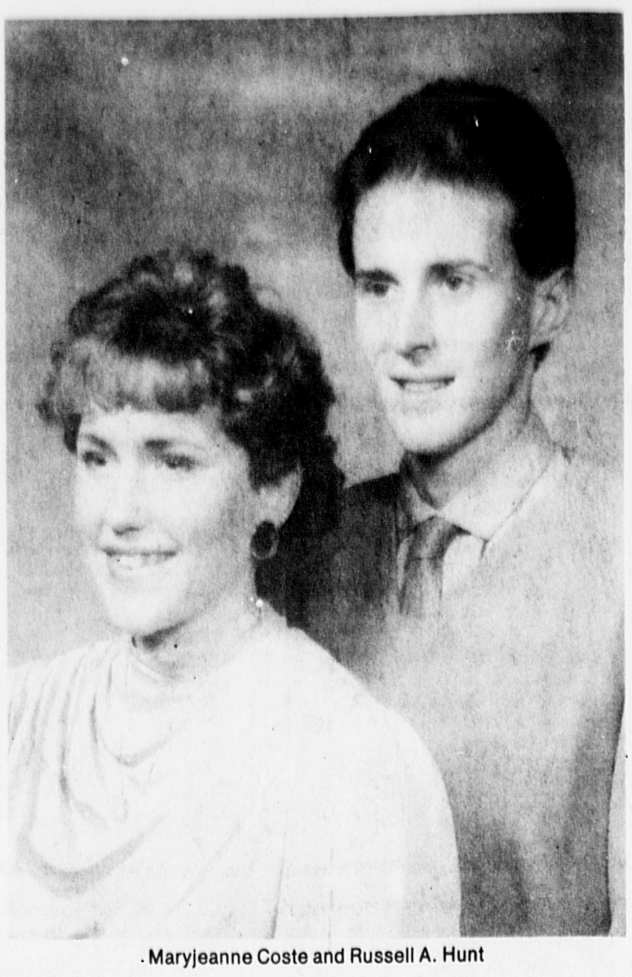
A June wedding is planned in East Hampton.

Wildflower program is scheduled

The Auburndale Garden Club will hold a wildflower conservation program on Feb. 3 at 9:30 a.m. in the library lecture hall of Lasell Junior College. The program will begin with slides of wildflower drawings and local flora watercolors. These beautifully executed artworks were done by Ellen Jackson, a granddaughter of William Jackson, and date from the 1800s. The slides were prepared by Steve Rosenthal.

The program features a lecture and slide presentation by Bruce Sorrie. Mr. Sorrie, a noted botanist, has been involved for many years in conservation efforts and is currently undertaking a statewide inventory of the plants and animals found in local communities.

The public is cordially invited to join us for a touch of spring. Refreshments will be served. A $1 donation is requested.



. Maryjeanne Coste and Russell A. Hunt

Maryjeanne Coste to be bride of Russell A. Hunt

Mr. Edward E. Coste and Dr. Ellen Chamberlain-Coste announce the engagement of their daughter, Maryjeanne, of Millis, to Russell Andrew Hunt of Newton. Russell is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Russell E. Hunt.

Maryjeanne is currently employed at Amica Insurance Company in Wellesley. Russell teaches fourth grade at St. Patrick's School in Watertown. A spring wedding is planned.

'Safari with a Camera' will be featured at Woman's Club meet

The Woman's Club of Newton Highlands will have its next meeting on Wednesday, Feb. 5. Dessert and social hour at 1 p.m. will be followed by the business meeting at 1:45 p.m.

The program, "Safari with a Camera," will be presented by Ruth Fifield, treasurer of the Watertown Woman's Club and former teacher at the Hyde School.

Mrs. Marguerite Searway, Chairman of the Veteran's Committee will be hostess, aided by her committee, May Casey, Helen Hoffman, Alvena Capone, Ruth Brady, Alice Boyd, Edna Hockridge, Dorothy Mackintosh, Mildred Martin and Mildred White.

Primavera's celebrate their 50th

Mr. and Mrs. John Primavera, formerly of Newton, now residing in Deltona, Fl., celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with family and friends at the American Legion Hall in Newton. They were married on Oct. 27, 1935.

The surprise party was given by their daughters, Florence Caira and Ann Smith, and their families. Six grandchildren and three great grandchildren joined in the celebration.

A special guest, Mary Santos of Millis, great aunt to the bridegroom, surprised the couple.

The wedding cake was made by Teresa Sauro, which had its original bride and bridegroom on top.

The bride's gown was also on display along with the wedding photo and many courting and memorable pictures.

Relatives and friends from Pennsylvania, Yarmouth, Osterville, Millis, Medway, Waltham, Framingham, Wellesley Hills, and Natick joined in the happy celebration.

Nazi smuggling to be subject of writer's speech

John Loftus, a Rockland lawyer who authored The Belarus Secret, a history of the Nazi smuggling programs in the Americas, published in 1982, will speak at a B'nai B'rith, B'nai B'rith Women and B'nai B'rith Youth Organization Connection Day brunch Feb. 2 at Temple Beth Am in Randolph.

The former trial attorney for the U.S. Justice Department's Office of Special Investigations (OSI) specialized in Byelorussian Nazis. When president Jimmy Carter created the OSI in 1979, Mr. Loftus coordinated top secret investigations into Nazi recruitment by U.S. intelligence officials.

The Belarus Secret, the subject last year of a CBS Movie of the Week, was declassified by the CIA nearly four years ago. A follow-up book is awaiting declassification by a Congressional committee.

Anyone interested in Atty. Loftus' talk is invited to attend the brunch which begins at 10 a.m. Tickets, $2 for youths under 18 and $3 for adults, may be obtained by sending checks to BBYO-New England, 325 Harvard St., Brookline, Mass. 02146. For information, phone 566-2076.

Women's Association will mark 75th anniversary

The Women's Association of the United Church of Christ in Newtonville will celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary on Feb. 5. The gala Diamond Jubilee will feature a catered luncheon and a program, "The King and I," presented by Nancy Howard DeBruyn.

Chairwomen for the luncheon are as follows: Dot Hills, Dining Room; Helen Swainson, Decorations. Reservations may be made with Louise Lutz on or before Feb. 2.

DeBruyn, brilliant singer and dancer, offers a costumed performance of "The King and I," one of the best-loved musical comedies of Broadway. She delivers a complete story as if she were holding a large musical mirror to reflect your fondest memories.

Frances Black will deliver the Devotions.

Pioneer Women Na'amat announces name change to Na'amat USA

Pioneer Women/Na'amat, which marks its 61st anniversary this year, has adopted a new name — Na'amat U.S.A. — to be more easily recognized as a sister organization to Na'amat, Israel's largest women's organization. The change of name was voted into effect at the organization's 29th biennial convention in Israel to express a common dedication with Na'amat in Israel to equal rights for all women.

Na'amat U.S.A. now has 50,000 clubs and councils across the United States. Na'amat in Israel has 750,000 members, including some 40,000 Arab and Druze women and operates a network of more than 1,000 educational, vocational and social service centers stretching from Kiryat Shmonah in the north of Eilat in the south. Na'amat U.S.A. is the major financial support for Na'amat in Israel, supplying funds to operate its expanding network of day care services, agricultural and vocational schools, legal services and advocacy programs to end discrimination in benefits and pay, and promote the advancement of the working woman.

On this side of the Atlantic, the Na'amat Washington Task Force of U.S.A. monitors legislation and takes public stands on Israel, attacks on the Constitution, and on women's issues such as child care and freedom of choice in abortion.

Varying styles mark Chapel Gallery exhibit

By Candy Kosow
Correspondent

Two new art shows opened in Newton recently — works by Debra Weisberg and Harry Brock at the Chapel Gallery in West Newton, and a show by 15 faculty members at the Newton Arts Center in Newtonville.

Once again, the Chapel Gallery is presenting an exhibit filled with unique and different styles. Harry Brock works with wood and paint to display large pieces of bold, abstract art. He uses layers of wood, cut and sculpted to fit the theme of the piece he is designing. They are all large in shape. Some are even huge, lifesize constructions, featuring bright colors, and non-descript shapes. His paint brush strokes are bold, and there is a definitiveness of color in all his works. "Pre-language" seems to speak of many things as it takes a bite out of life with its sharp tooth commentary.

His new wave, theatrical works — like "Foreign Matter" and "treat me like a Tourist" — are filled with humor. "Foreign Matter" is also a very political work, depicting representations of guns, smoke and fire, all basking in an agent orange glow.

Debra Weisberg's works are all wall hangings with an intense multi-dimensional quality through the use of sticks, twigs, paper mache, paint and shalac.

"Shout" seems to do just that as it protrudes from the wall. It screams out with passion and conviction amidst layers of concern and pontification. A few of Weisberg's works depict the seasons with unique color combinations. A black and white coil-shaped structure with sticks running through it is "Winter." While there are no traditional browns and yellows and oranges in "Autumn," instead she uses frost-nipped sticks surrounded by lavenders and light greens.

Weisberg's collection also displays some very complex configurations. "Recesses," "Vortex," "Fragmented Silhouette" and "Echo" all show great character and ability.

The works by the 15 teachers at the Newton Arts Center are all good, but few show the creativity and imagination displayed by the artists at the Chapel Gallery. There are some delightfully optic watercolors by Lareen Rueckner and some humorous exhibitions by Barbara Baum. Her works include titles such as, "It's Too Late to Wish Upon a Star" and "We've Been Up This Road Before." There is a Salvador Dali mood that can be felt in Tom Lewis's three-part work entitled, "A Contemporary Crucifixion." The funniest presentation in this show is by Henry Schwartz. His oils are filled with craftsmanship and emotion. "Self Portrait with a Tape Recorder" and the best piece of the entire show, "A Streetcar Named Mushugge," are just wonderful. Marcia Bohlen's colored pencil creations are masterful.

In addition, there are a handful of artists displaying photographs in this show, but the most intriguing are Robert Kaufman's three large colored photos entitled "Florida," "Texas," and "Italy." The most different medium to be displayed in the show is something called porcelain under glazes. These Daisy Brand pieces are visually pleasing, with great texture and muted colors. Her "Last Stop" and "Gate and Guard" are quite appealing.

Both exhibitions will be underway through Feb. 2.

Rogers rescues North girls

CAMBRIDGE — A box-and-one by Cambridge, Rindge & Latin backfired Friday as the visiting Newton North Tigers took full advantage of a healthy supply of scorers to place three players in double figures enroute to a 51-44 Suburban League victory.

Carol Ventura was the object of the dreaded box-and-one, and while South's leading scorer still managed 15 points, it was Wendy Rogers who had a field day.

The wide-open and willing to shoot Rogers canned seven hoops and added three free throws on the way to a 17-point performance, her first game this year in double figures.

Ann Meng also profited from the risky defense, hitting for 12 deadly points.

Add to that the return of Carolyn Natale from an injury, and the Tiger offense is unstoppable. Natale, while still not 100 percent, dropped home four points, but more importantly, pulled down 10 rebounds.

Newton North led, 24-16, at intermission, and it was only when Natale got herself into foul trouble and was forced to rest for most of the second half that Cambridge cut the lead.

The Cantabs had reduced the Tiger lead to six, 36-30, entering the fourth before North went to work with its pressure defense. A few steals later, the Tigers were in control, looking at their 10th win in 11 tries.

Rhonda Greene, the Suburban League's second leading scorer, scored a game-high 18 to lead Cambridge.

North is 10-1 overall and 5-1 in the league.

South trips Weston

Weston shot 18-for-31 from the free throw line, almost overtaking visiting Newton South, but it was Cheryl Williams and Katrina Antonellis who spelled it out in the end as the Lions took a 48-42 Dual County League decision.

Antonellis contributed her standard 20-point-plus night with an impressive 21, annd Williams canned six of her 10 points down the strech to rescue the slumping Lions.

Via its fair mark from the foul line, Weston had battled back from a 34-18 deficit after three to cut the South lead to two midway through the fourth. Williams then took her cue and scored six to pull South away with the victory.

For Weston, junior Sarah Lindsay scored 11 and twin sister Christine Lindsay chipped in with 10 off the bench. Senior center Helen Kahn had 14 rebounds.

For South, Lucy Ketterer had a strong game defensively.

Murphy comes through for Lions

WATERTOWN — Dan Murphy came up with a big power-play goal in the final minute of the second period to reverse what was becoming a Wayland landslide and Newton South escaped with a 6-4 Dual County League hockey victory on Saturday at the Watertown Skating Rink.

The Lions had built up a 4-0 lead before watching the Warriors come storming back with four goals in the second period to tie the score. Three of those markers came in a 1½-minute span late in the second stanza.

Goals by Eric Marder, Tom McGary, Judd Cohen and Murphy had the Lions sitting pretty early in the second heat. Doug Brooks scored for Way;and at 3:01, but that didn't seem disastrous since South still had a three-goal lead. But when John Secor scored at 11:05 and then seven seconds later, the Lions felt trouble coming in a hurry. Just over a minute later their worst fears were realized when Wayland tied the game.

But shortly after that, the Warriors took a penalty, and that's what turned the game around. The Lion power play was a going concern all night, and Murphy made Wayland pay for its mistake.

Rob Goldberg sent the puck out to Cohen at the point and he fired a shot on the net. That was stopped, but Murphy was there to pick up the rebound and fire it home.

Murphy, in only his second game since moving from defense to wing on a line with Dan Monbouquette and Jay Jewett, had three goals in that span.

Monbouquette ice the game with a goal at 6:24 of the third, taking a pass from Murphy. It was Monbouquette's ninth goal of the year to go along with eight assists.

Cohen had another good game on defense, including a big power-play goal to make it 3-0.

Murphy's second goal was a relief to South coach Tom Rezzuti, who is at the point "the way things are going we expect anything to happen."

The win snapped a nine-game losing streak for the lIons, but not without some harrowing moments at the end. Goalie Roger Mack hurt his neck with two minutes to play, forcing freshman Alex Doran to come in cold and hold the fort. He did, despite some strong pressure in the final moments.

Now 2-9, the Lions face a stiff test on Wednesday when they travel to the Middlesex School Rink in Concord for a 6:30 p.m. contest with Concord-Carlisle.

Tiger matmen cop pair of victories

NEWTON — Scott Lanciloti and Scott Fabian picked up three wins eachh Saturday as the host Newton North matmen won two of three meets in a quad meet against Malden, Lexington, and Randolph.

The Tigers nipped Malden in the opener, 37-27, before getting croaked by Lexington, 45-18. Newton North came back to make the afternoon worth while with 45-23 drumming of Randolph.

Lanciloti's day was tops on the North squad as the 157-pound senior demolished his Malden opponent on a technical fall, 16-1. Against Lexington, Lanciloti had an easier time, winning by forfeit, but made up for his time off in the Randolph meet, pinning his man in just 35 seconds.

With 107-pound Malcom White out because of injury, North Coach Steve Parker bumped 100-pound Scott Fabian to the higher weight class against Randolph, and the move payed off.

Not only did Fabian beat his man, he destroyed his oppoent, winning by technical fall, 16-1.

Prior to his advancement, Fabian had defeated two opponents in the 100-pound class. He won by technical fall against his Malden opponent, 16-1, then picked up a pin at 2:24 in the Lexington meet.

Against Malden, 187-pound Brian Claflin snapped a tie with 15-7 win and Mark Simmons picked up forfeit points in the heavyweight division to secure the North victory.

Simmons had a tougher time against Lexinton. The 205-pound heavyweight was leading, 8-2 in the second period when his 255-pound opponent suddenly dropped him for the count.

Gino Farese played musical chairs for Parker also, moving up one weight class to 128 pounds. The 121-pound junior varsity wrestler picked up his first big-league win, pinning his oppoent in 1:28.

Newton North, 4-12, will travel to Brookline for a Wednesday meet.

South gymnasts are shaded

Wellesley High girl gymnasts, led by all-around performer Karen MacDonald, handed Newton South its seventh straight loss in an extremely close meet, 85.95 to 85.35, at Newton South gym Friday.

Daniele Kalfon, a senior who is competing in gymnastics for the first time this year for the Lions, placed third in floor exercise. Co-Capt. Leora Bloch garnered seconds both in floor exercise and on the balance beam.

North tops Brookline

First place in every event went to Brookline on Tuesday, but depth paid off for the Newton North girls in a 103.1-91.9 gymnastics victory.

The Tigers were nursing a two-point lead at halftime, but beat the Indians by five in the bars and nearly four points on the floor to win going away.

"We had a lot of depth," said North coach Meg Ross. Her gymnasts took both second and third in three of the four events.

Tammy Geodken and Nicki Cradle tied for second in the vault at 7.9, with Cassandra Young right behind at 7.8.

Geodken was also second in both the bar and floor exercise. Jocelyn Glazier and Ann Silk helped the Tigers dominate the bar.

Friday, Geodken won the uneven bars and the balance beam to help North to a four-point lead by halftime, and the Tigers coasted to a 92.1-82.9 victory over Concord-Carlisle.

Though the visiting Patriots took second and third in both events, but the intermission it was 39.55-34.75 in favor of North. Geodken's beam routine was exceptionally clean.

Though C-C won the vault and shared first with Geodken on the floor exercise, the Tigers outscored the Pats in both events as they extended the lead. The vault was fairly close at 30.8-29.8, but the Tigers controlled the floor, 21.7-18.3.

Cradle had another good showing, tying for second in the vault and finishing third in the floor exercise.

South tripped

Newton South posted its highest score of the year in a 92.25-84.1 loss to Concord-Carlisle at South. The best the Lions had previously done was 78 points, and Coach Judy Kennedy expects the numbers to run up even higher because Mara Raider was out with an illness on Tuesday.

The Patriots had a slight edge in three of the events, but the Lions did manage to take the floor exercise, 20.85-20.55. Leora Bloch (6.25) and Ellen Hackel (5.25) took second and third behind Concord's Ryan Hall, who won three events.

Kennedy was also happy with the performance of Leslie Gibbs in her debut on the uneven bars.

Friday, Wayland senior Courtney McKown swept all four events, which was more than enough to lead the Warriors to an 83.3-70.55 triumph over South.

The Lions were without Bloch, but it's hard to say whether she would have changed the outcome, given the way McKown was performing.

She scored a 5.15 on the bars, 5.5 on the beam, 7.65 on the vault and capped her day with a 5.75 on the floor exercise.

Denise Hill

Letter winner

Denise Hill, a freshman at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., and a resident of Newton, earned her first varsity letter in volleyball, head coach Gale Lackey announced recently.

Hill played a key role as a reserve for the Cardinals. While women's volleyball had existed as a club sport for many years at Wesleyan, the team received varsity status just last season.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Hill of 108 Hagen Rd., Newton, Denise is a 1985 graduate of Newton South High School where she was awarded letters in volleyball, swimming, and indoor and outdoor track.

'3rd line' promotes ice win for Newton North

WATERTOWN — Selecting just one star of the game Wednesday was a little difficult for Newton North hockey coach Jack Heavey. The first-year Newton coach would have liked to give it to an entire line.

In the third period Heavey assigned what was, on paper, his third-string line to closely guard a Brookline forward trio which had already accounted for three goals.

What came of it was not only goose egg on the score card for Brookline's top line in the final frame, but a tying goal and a switch of momentum, all amounting to a 4-3 Newton North victory at the Watertown Rink.

"We jumped out, 2-0, but we were not playing well," Heavey said after the game. "They (Brookline) came back with three goals and the momentum was easily in their favor."

Brookline's Rich Sheridan erased Newton's 2-0 first-period lead with a hat trick in the middle frame, forcing the change from the Newton North coach.

Junior Mike Kornitzer and sophomores Jay Cappello and Joe Proia rose to the occasion, and using a combination of strong forechecking and nasty backchecking, Newton's "third line" dryed off Sheridan and his linemates.

"They deserve an awful lot of credit," praised Heavey, speaking of his junior-sophomore-sophomore connection. "They switched the momentum, they took it away from Brookline."

Heavey asked for tight-checking from his third line, not goal scoring, but Cappello delivered the game-tyer anyway.

The sophomore pounced on a David O'Connor rebound at the corner of the Brookline net, stuffing the puck home at 2:54 to tie the score, 3-3.

Newton would hold the play for another eight minutes before sophomore Tom Tocci netted his second goal of the night for the Tigers, this one the game winner.

Tocci's first goal had given Newton North a 2-0 lead in the first frame. Tocci picked the puck up at center ice, faked a Brookline defender left before heading right, then wristed a quick shot into the net.

Newton North's first goal was scored by Tim Weaver.

The Tigers improved its record to 9-3 overall.

Stewart hits at buzzer as Lions shade Weston

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Reggie Stewart and Newton South hoopsters gave new meaning to the phrase "winning ugly" Friday at South High, but that's okay, the 7-3 Lions will take a win any way they can get it.

Stewart canned a way-outside shot with no time remaining, lifting the Lions over a stunned Weston squad, 74-72, and into a second-place tie with the Wildcats in the Dual County League.

While Stewart's buzzer-beater hit nothing but net, the Lions had hit nothing but air for most of the night. Newton South shot just 38 percent from the field for the game, trailing by five at the half and by six after three before making the move.

"It sure wasn't pretty - it was no Madonna - but we'll take it," South Coach Joe Killilea said. "If there's one thing that should be noted, it's that my guys never give up. We play hard even in the games we lose."

South led, 9-8, on a Randy Collins (12 points) three-point play way back in the opening minutes of play, but Weston would outshoot, out-rebound, and out-play the home team for most of the next two quarters.

Then in the fourth quarter, the Lions would claw their way back into the game. South trailed by eight following a six-point Weston run with 6:15 left, but the Lions were not quite through.

Weston's Keith Abbott (13 points) had two of the Wildcat hoops in that six-point run, the last being a nifty flight inside resulting in a 58-50 lead. Abbott, however, circled the key and raced towards the Weston bench following the hoop, sporting a gushing bloody nose. The big frontman left the game, taking with him 10 points and a bundle of rebounds, and would return only when 20-point man Daryl Aiekens fouled out with 4:21 remaining.

By that time South had cut the Weston lead to three, 63-60, sparked by a Kris Tyler three-point play. The Wildcats would gain two points on the Lions, leading 67-62 with 3:46 remaining, before the roof caved in.

Rohan Henry (12 points) hit from inside, Stewart sank one from outside, and Collins would sink the second attempt of a two-shot foul to tie the score, 67-all, with 2:18 left.

Dwight Griffith (10 points) put Weston up by two, sinking a pair of free throws, but Henry would answer for South with a bucket off an offensive rebound to tie it again, this time 69-69 with 1:45 left.

Abbott, back in the game for Weston, sank a free throw with 1:01 left and Glen Cort converted on an inside move with 26 seconds left to put Weston back up, 72-69, then Lions took it to town.

Collins dropped in a pair of charity tosses with 23 seconds showing to bring Newton within one, then Wildcat Rich Cook was called on a questionable travel underneath the Weston net to stop play with 16 ticks left.

T.J. Rohn brought the ball upcourt for South, dishing off to Stewart on the left baseline with sevens seconds left. Stewart was fouled on a failed outside jumper, and after missing the first free throw attempt, he hit the second to knot the score for the third time in two minutes.

The Wildcats then almost doomed themselves, calling a timeout they never had, resulting in a technical foul and one Newton South shot.

Stewart (one-for-five foul shooting) went to the line to win it but clanked the shot off the front of the rim, setting up an Lion inbounds play at halfcourt with seven seconds left.

It was Collins, forcing a pass to Stewart, and this time the Newton South star would not waste the opportunity. Instead, he let loose a prayer that was answered, swishing home the game winner as time expired.

"We wanted to get it to him (Stewart)," Killilea said after the game. "That's his range, he's a good outside shooter."

Top Acton-Boxboro

Reggie Stewart went on an early tear, hitting his first five shots, as Newton South dumped host Acton-Boxboro, 79-68, in Dual County League action Tuesday.

Stewart (23 points) racked up 12 first-half points to lead South to a 17-16 lead after one, then turned the show over to Randy Collins in the second quarter.

Collins (23 points) canned 12 second-quarter points as South expanded on its lead, taking a 43-34 margin into intermission.

Newton South Coach Joe Killilea said it was a good thing the offense was in high gear, because the Lion defense looked shaky.

"Our defensive intensity wasn't really there tonight," the coach said. Acton took advantage of South's defensive lapses to cut the deficit to four points in the final frame but Pillan Thirumalaisamy canned a handful of free throws down the stretch to secure the game.

Thirumalaisamy hit five of six charity tosses in the final minutes to boost South's lead.

Stewart added six rebounds, three blocked shots, and two steals to his 23 points. Jim Mercer helped out on the boards for Newton, clearing eight rebounds.

South had a season-low six turnovers in the game.

The summary:

NEWTON SOUTH(74)-Henry 6-0-12, Stewart 8-1-17, Mercer 1-0-2, Collins 2-8-12, Marion 1-0-2, Grossman 2-3-7, Rohn 2-2-6, Levine 2-1-5, Brewington 1-0-2, Thirumalaisamy 2-2-6, Tyler 1-1-3. Tot. 28-18-74.

Andrew Christensen rests comfortably at Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

Patriot's fever results in broken leg

For one fan, "Patriot's fever was more than a temporary condition characterized by extreme team support. Last week, 17 year old Andrew Christensen of Newtonville and his next-door neighbor, Ari, took a break during the half-time of the Patriot's-Dolphins playoff game. With the television turned down low, the two young men started their own game of "run and pass." Andrew felt the feverish pitch of the game and challenged himself to play his best.

Andrew is used to challenges. Although he has had cerebral palsy since birth, Andrew has not allowed the disease to keep him from excelling at his talents — football and journalism.

"It wasn't unusual for us to be pitching the football back and forth. We often get together to do this," explained Andrew.

While Andrew rose to one of Ari's passes, extending himself as much as he could, Ari tackled his friend, landing on top of him. With his toes pinned downward, Andrew heard his ankle snap.

"I broke my ankle," he cried out. Ari didn't quite believe Andrew and encouraged him to get up and get back into the game, which Andrew did. Halfway through the third quarter, Ari realized that Andrew was right — the right ankle looked very swollen.

When Andrew arrived at the Newton-Wellesley Hospital's Emergency Department, he was greeted by the entire Emergency staff. With all the Patriot's fans watching the game, there were few emergencies and it had been a quiet afternoon.

After orthopedic surgeon, Robert Steinberg, M.D. set Andrew's fractured right ankle, Andrew was admitted to the pediatric unit for a few days to recuperate.

Andrew's ankle is on the mend but his "Patriot's Fever" is probably a permanent condition.

Cantabs outguns Tiger hoopsters

All-American Rumeal Robinson and his Cambridge Rindge and Latin teammates were simply too much for Newton North in a Suburban League game Friday at the Newton North gym.

The highly recruited guard scored 13 points in the first period and 21 in the game as the Warriors took a 69-47 victory over the Tigers at North.

With Robinson scoring and controlling things from his point guard slot and Lance Dottin crashing the boards, the visitors ran out to a 22-12 first-quarter lead. A couple of timely turnovers were all the Warriors needed to pull away early.

The Tigers stiffened up in the second quarter and played the Warriors even well into the third until Cambridge put together another run to stretch the lead out to 18 by the end of the frame.

Cambridge held a wide edge on the boards in the game, led by Dottin and 6-9 center Russell Jarvis. North had 14 rebounds in the entire first half.

"We played pretty good D," said North coach Jerry Phillips. "We had kind of a letdown on the boards and on the press, but other than that we did what we wanted to do."

Andy Lockwood led North with 14 points, while Dottin finished with 15 for Cambridge.

The summary:

Newton Rec. swimmers top Acton

NEWTON — Rivalries often exist because of the closeness of two communities, but in the case of the Newton and Acton-Boxboro recreation swim teams, the rivalry exists on pure competitiveness.

Acton-Boxboro won the recreation championship in 1984-85 and Newton won it in 1983-84 and '82-83. This year, the championship is again up for grabs.

Newton drew first blood recently, drowning Acton, 272.5-209.5, in what could prove to be one of the biggest meets of the season.

Amanda Keavey led the Newton charge, winning the 50 butterfly in the 11- and 12-year-old girls' division. For the third meet in a row, Keavey set her personal best, this time with a 32.77 finish.

In the 15-18 division, Nancy Connolly snapped her own record in the backstroke with a time of 32.04.

Acton held a slight lead for three divisions before the Newton swimmers took over. Four first-place finishes in the 11- and 12-year-old girls' division sparked the Newton swimmers.

The summary:

Newton 272.5, Acton-Boxboro 209.5

Dunn, Clark rescue Newton Mites

Outstanding performances by Doug Dunn and Laurie Clark preserved back-to-back ties for the Newton Mites in recent Middlesex Youth Hockey League play.

In a 4-4 seat-squirmer with Natick, Dunn tied the game at 3-all at the six-minute mark of the third period on a breakaway goal with an assist from Clurman. He then added what appeared to be the game winner a minute later with a slapshot from the blue line. Locke and Kuronen assisted on the goal.

Natick got back on even terms at the 11:25 mark, and despite considerable pressure from Newton's first line of Murphy, Birnbaum and Pratt and the outside shooting of Maxwell and Dunn, Natick managed to hold on for a tie.

The other Newton goals were scored by Murphy and Birnbaum.

It was much the same story against Lexington-Bedford, a game that ended in a 2-2 deadlock. Dunn scored both Newton goals unassisted and played a strong game on defense while Clark made 22 saves in a sparkling net-minding effort.

Campus briefs

Virginia R. Beeson of Newton Centre has recently been awarded the Navy Commendation Medal from the Navy ROTC at Boston University.

A lieutenant commander in the U.S. Navy, Beeson was presented with the award at the University's School of Nursing, where she is a graduate student studying nursing administration. She received the award for her professional ability and service during her four years of nursing duty on the Special Surgery Ward of the Naval Hospital in Charleston, S.C. "Her astute clinical skills measurably improved the operational effectiveness of the ward and contributed to the success of the hospital's mission," wrote U.S. Navy Admiral James D. Watkins in his citation to Beeson.

A 1973 graduate of the University of Vermont, Beeson is originally from Sussex, N.J.

Newton residents dominated the honor roll announcements at the Beaver Country Day School recently. High honors were awarded to seniors Jason Boro, Lisa Kagan, and Jill Mazza and tenth grader Wendy Dameshek.

Receiving honors were Andrew Christensen, Todd Ente, Anjili Finessi, Allison Latt, Richard Marcus, Karen Pill, Marcy Richmond, Sam Simmons, Jennifer Brandwein, Hope Coppinger, Eric Johnson, David Kraut, Thomas Morse, Jennifer Roberts, Allison Carver, Jane Dvorak, Lauren Hindman, Ann Maynard, Pamela Mazza, Mara Reimer, Margaret Lamont, Ashley Whittaker, and Anna Wolf.

Newton residents Andrew Bernhaimer, Lawrence Glazer, Stuart Meltzer, Charles Mulkeen, Kenneth Small, and Kenneth Wolfe, all from the Rivers School in Weston, participated in the Harvard Model U.N. held in Boston recently.

Junior Susan Morrison and 8th graders Alayne Arntz, Blaise Kearsly and Heather Newberg were recently named to the Honor Roll at the Brimmer and May School in Chestnut Hill. The young women achieved honors for their academic performance in the first trisemester.

The following Newton students were named to Framingham State College's dean's list for the fall 1985 semester: Mary Hodgedon-Manning of Hatfield Road, and Rina Shiller of Ridgeway Terrace.

Sharon Rousseau of California Street, Newton, was named to the President's list at Framingham State College for the 1985 fall semester.

Michael S. Grant of Newton and Ellen M. Guarino of Chestnut Hill are Dean Junior College alumni who participated in the school's recent Telefund, which was conducted in mid-fall, and raised an all-time high of $68,793 in pledges.

Barry Logan, from Newton North, and Ian S. Tattenbaum, from Newton South, will be honored for their academic and human achievements on Feb. 2 at the 32nd Annual Brotherhood Breakfast at the Hillcrest in Waltham. The event is sponsored by the Department of Massachusetts Jewish War Veterans of the United States. Newton Post #211 is honoring the students.

Mohammed I. Hag, Daniel J. Kim, and Marco A. Pinto, Northeastern University freshmen from Newton, scored high enough in the College Board's Advanced Placement Program to become advanced standing students.

Janice Morse of Newtonville and Cynthia Castle of Newton Centre have enrolled at Chamberlayne Junior College in Boston for the spring semester. Janice has chosen the interior design program and Cynthia will be in general college.

Newswatch

Arnold Feinerman

Dr. Richard Kerbel has been admitted to the affiliate staff with privileges in pediatrics.

A graduate of the University of Cape Town Medical School in South Africa, Kerbel served his internship in Cape Town and a residency at WalthamWeston Hospital and Medical Center in 1979. He then became a resident in pediatrics at Boston City Hospital from 1980-82. Kerbel has also served a fellowship in adolescent medicine at Tufts-New England Medical Center Hospital.

Kerbel maintains a private practice in pediatrics and adolescent medicine in Watertown. He and his family reside in Newton Centre.

Lotte Lent of Newton Centre was chosen as an American Venturer to participate in Operation Raleigh, an international community service expedition. Lent was selected for the May-July Australian phase of Operation Raleigh's circumnavigation of the globe. Lent is a class of 1981 graduate of Newton South High School and an alumna of Carnegie-Mellon University class of 1985 where she received her B.A. degree in history. After her initial application, Lent was chosen to attend a Selectman Weekend in Hartford, Conn., where a group of candidates were screened for their skills, character, stamina, and potential. Operation Raleigh was conceived by HRH the Prince of Wales, Prince Charles, under whose patronage the program has been developing and utilizing the skills of young people from 32 countries around the world. Operation Raleigh Venturers conduct scientific research and provide community service on each phase of each four-year expedition.

Ruth Silin of Newton Centre was elected to the board of directors of the Therapeutic Community, a private non-profit corporation providing rehabilitation programs for adults with disabilities. She was appointed at the 14th Annual Meeting recently held at its corporate offices at 1073 Hancock St., Quincy.

Attorney Richard H. Goldman, senior partner of the law firm Widett, Slater & Goldman has been selected for inclusion in the Marquis Publication Who's Who in American Law.

In addition to his practice of corporate and other aspects of business law, Mr. Goldman is presently the chairman of the real estate law for Massachusetts Continuing Legal Education.

Mr. Goldman is also active in various business organizations including the United States Trust Capital Corporation of which he is a member of the Board of Directors, and the Grove Hall Savings Bank, where he is a trustee and Chairman of the Audit Committee. Goldman's community activities include occupying the office of Vice President of Temple Israel in Boston, and membership on the Board of Governors of the Belmont Country Club. He has also previously served as former chairman of the City of Newton Human Rights Commission.

The Marquis' Who's Who Publications have been in existence since 1899. Selection for membership in Who's Who in American Law is based upon an individual's position and achievements. The publication has a far-reaching audience comprised of historians, journalists, researchers business people, and students.

The Board of Directors of Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation has announced the election of Waban resident Percy L. Nelson to the position of vice president.

Nelson is in charge of the group within Stone & Webster which provides engineering and design service to the pulp and paper industry. Prior to this promotion, Nelson served as consulting engineer and chief engineer within Stone & Webster. He graduated from Williams College with a B.A. in physics and mathematics and from M.I.T. with a B.A. in electric power.

Nelson has been active on several committees of the Noble & Greenough School, including the Building Committee, and the Graduates Association.

He and his wife Mary have four grown children, Hildegard, Edward, Mary and Paul.

Arnold Feinerman of Newton has been elected as a member of the Board of Directors of the Kidney Foundation of Massachusetts.

Feinerman, a graduate of Nasson College with a degree in Business Administration and Wentworth Institute with a degree in Construction Engineering, is president of Admiral Construction Corp. of Boston. He also owns and operates Arnold Financial Corporation and Arnold Realty and Management Corporation.

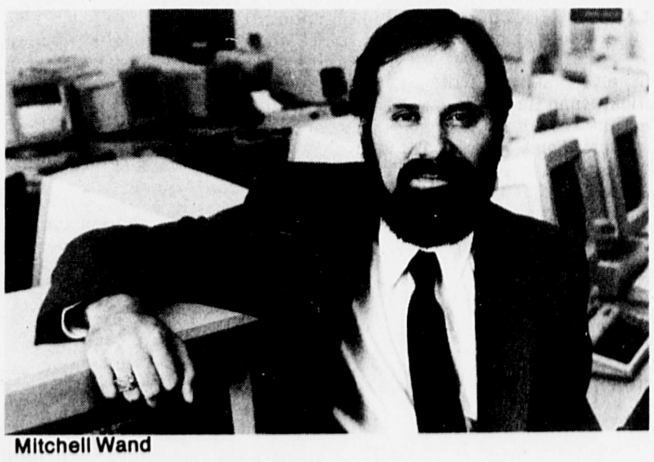
A leader with many civic and philanthropic organizations, he serves as Vice President of the Society to Prevent Blindness; Vice President of the Men's Associates, Hebrew Rehabilitation Center for Aged; and Chaplain for the B'nai B'rith Realty Lodge. He is a member of the Beth Israel Hospital Men's Associates and the Construction Division of the Combined Jewish Philanthropies of Greater Boston. As Membership Chairman for the HRCA, he was awarded a special citation for his leadership in bringing the organization's roster to more than 5,000 members.

Feinerman, who had a kidney removed when he was 5 years old, has been a supporter of the state organization for more than 20 years. His affliction served as motivation for total family involvement in raising hundreds of thousands of dollars for the Kidney Foundation since its founding in Massachusetts.

Mitchell Wand of Beacon Street, Newton, was appointed associate dean and director of graduate studies for the College of Computer Science at Northeastern University. The college is the first of its kind in the country.

Wand, 36, who was a computer science professor at Indiana University for 13 years, will be the college's first associate dean.

Paul Kalaghan, dean of the college, said Wand is a "household word in computer science in the United States." He was one of the first people in the country to develop mathematical models that examine the behavior of computer programs, Kalaghan said.



Mitchell Wand

With Wand's mathematical models, one can determine the validity of a program as soon as it has been written. "This is at the heart of all programming," Kalaghan said. Wand holds undergraduate and doctoral degrees in mathematics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Newton resident Stephen M. Davidson has been named associate professor and director of Health Management Programs at Boston University's School of Management.

Before coming to Boston University, Davidson taught and conducted research for more than 12 years at the University of Chicago and Northwestern University in Illinois. At the University of Chicago, he was on the faculty of the School of Social Service Administration and was a research associate in the University's Pritzker School of Medicine and Center for Health Administration Studies.

For the past four years, Davidson taught at Northwestern's Graduate School of Management and in the Department of Community Health and Preventative Medicine in the Medical School. In addition, he was a member of the Center for Health Services and Policy Research.

A Ph.D. graduate from the University of Chicago, Davidson holds a master of social work degree from the University of Maryland and a bachelor of arts degree from Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania. Originally from Baltimore, Maryland, he currently resides with his wife and two children in Newton.

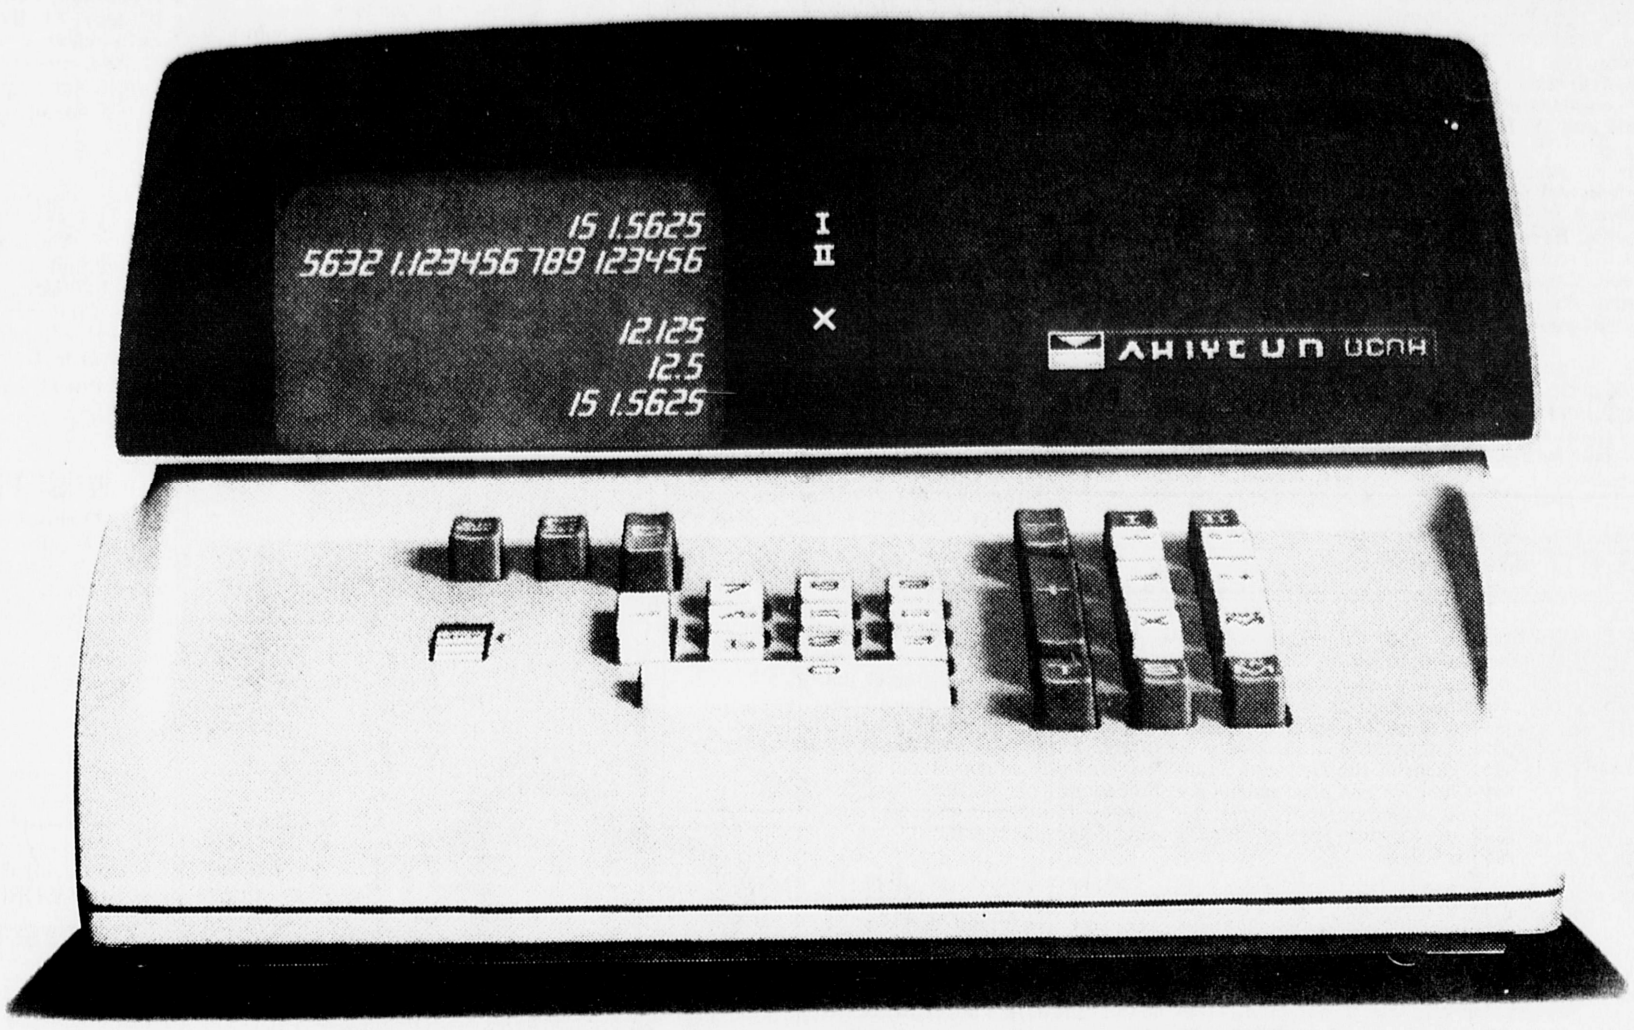
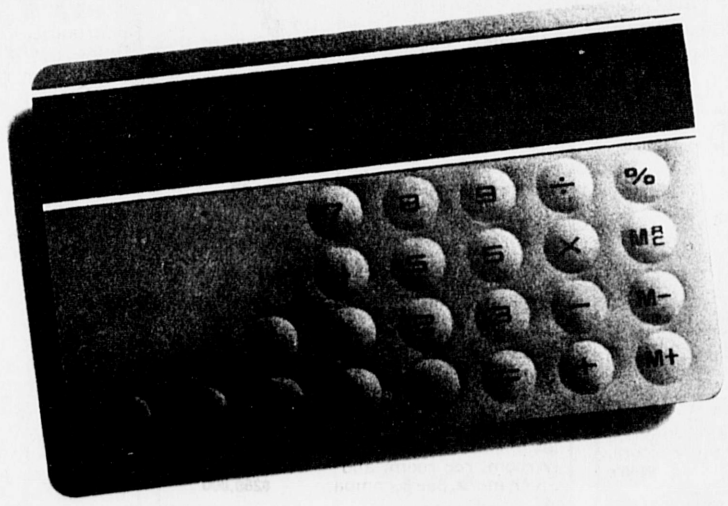
A SIMPLE LESSON IN ECONOMICS FOR ANYONE WHO BELIEVES ADVERTISING RAISES PRICES.



1965 calculator – Over $2000.00



1984 calculator – Under $10.00

In the beginning there was the calculator.

It was a new idea. It had never been advertised. And it cost a fortune.

Then the people who sold calculators started to advertise them. That was hardly a new idea. But it, too, cost a fortune.

Now, you might think all that expensive advertising would drive the price of a calculator to incalculable heights.

But no. What happened was exactly the opposite.

It doesn't make sense. How can something as costly as advertising end up saving you money?

It's really quite simple. Advertising spreads news. When it spread the news of the calculator, people started to buy.

As more calculators were sold, more were produced. As more were produced, the cost of producing them came down. And because advertising creates competition, their quality and sophistication went up.

So today, using an electronic calculator is almost cheaper than counting on your fingers. And advertising helped make it happen — just as it has for countless other products.

In fact, with a little effort you could probably figure out precisely how much money advertising has saved you over the years.

But don't try it without a calculator.

ADVERTISING.
ANOTHER WORD FOR FREEDOM OF CHOICE.
